WILSON MAY PICK SUPREME U. S. WAR BOARD

Quick Action to Get Team Work Is Urged.

This is the fifth of a series of articles by Mr. Hyde on war activities in Washington.

BY HENRY M. HYDE.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—The White House has under consideration the appointment of a supreme war board. It may be appointed under that title or another. It may contain three, five, or some other number of members. President Wilson may finally decide that the necessity for such a board is not sufficiently pressing.

Through members of the cabinet and in other ways President Wilson has been told of the confusion and conflict now prevailing among the various departments and commissions in charge of war activities.

It has been suggested to him that the appointment of a central board, to which all the others shall report, would promote teamwork, prevent delays, and greatly speed up the preparations for war.

Hope for Quick Action.

Men prominent in the commissions are hopeful that President Wilson will act promptly. They hope that the executive will in some form make himself master of the present tangled and alarming situation.

Meantime every day's investigation develops fresh proofs of the absolute necessity of the establishment of some central and authoritative body which, under only the final authority and approval of the president, shall render the high decisions between departments and commissions, between even the demands of our own departments and those of our allies.

Make Enormous Demands.

I am sorry that pledges of confidence prevent me from making public, at present, the most staggering facts to which I have had access. I may only say that the vastness of the demands made by some departments along certain lines almost shake belief in the sanity of the men making them. These demands, if allowed in their original form, would most seriously affect the normal business interests of the country for the next year or two.

If they are justified and, necessary the business interests would be willing to stand it. At least, they would have to stand it. If, in their entirety, they are not justified or immediately necessary it would be almost criminal to yield to them.

At present there is nobody short of the president to render such a decision between departments or even to say how far the demands of a given department shall be granted.

Here is another situation which a supreme war board, taking a wide and comprehensive view of the war activities of the government might or might not have been able to avert.

Need Gun Machinery.

Field guns for the army abroad are being made at the government arsenals at Watervliet and Watertown. Strikes of workmen at both plants are still in progress in spite of the assurance from the Buffalo convention of the American Federation of Labor that strikes would not be permitted to interfere with war work. But that is not the only or the worst feature of the situation.

"The output of the government arsenals at Watervliet and Watertown is being seriously curtailed," an official of the war department says, "because of our failure to secure heavy duty lathes, slotters, and large drill presses. If the equipment were in sight we would immediately proceed to triple the capacity of certain departments. The skilled labor—for a long time a serious problem—has been found. We have the men and now we cannot find or get the machinery for the men to use. If one of the nations allied with us should ask permission to export a single machine of the type we lack the application would certainly be weighed most carefully."

Combed Clean by Allies.

It is true, of course, that during the nearly three years of war before the United States entered it England and France combed this country for big machine tools, drills, slotters, planes and large lathes. It is also true that there are few companies making such tools. And they are all booked solid

German Force Annihilated by Italians

BULLETIN.

ITALIAN HEADQUARTERS, Nov. 17.—The Austro-Germans today made furious attempts to break the Italian line and crossed the Piave river at two points, but were annihilated at one point and driven back at the other. Although the Italian lines are holding, the situation is considered grave.

(By the Associated Press.)

Italy's armies are making a heroic and so far successful stand against the Austro-German masses along the line of the Piave river and in the mountainous region from the Piave westward to the edge of the Trentino district. The river line has not been breached at any point, while the thrust of the Austrians southward from the hills in an attempt to drive a wedge through to the plains behind the Piave line is making slow progress, while the defense grows stronger.

The latest Austro-German attempts to gain a permanent hold on the westerly side of the Piave were not only brilliantly frustrated but the enemy columns were badly cut up and nearly 1,000 Teutons were taken prisoner.

Hem In Zenson Loop.

These attacks were delivered just above the Zenson loop, where the invaders first effected a crossing and were hemmed in. They are steadily being driven here into an increasingly restricted zone, the Rome war office announces.

Near the Adriatic, the water barrier to any Austro-German advance toward Venice, raised by the opening of the flood gates into the swampy region, is being reinforced by the work of the army artillery and the guns of Italian warships on the Adriatic.

The Italian line has yielded slightly in the hills east of the Brenta, where the capture of Monte Prassolan by Austro-Hungarian troops is announced by Berlin. No further advances for the attacking forces in the mountain region northeast of Asiago are claimed.

BRITISH GUNS IN ACTION.

ITALIAN ARMY HEADQUARTERS, Nov. 17.—British artillery is in action against the Austro-Germans today.

Manning their guns with machinelike precision, the British soldiers have caused havoc to the enemy's plans for an advance.

Observers reported great gaps torn in the Austro-German lines by the deadly rain of shells. At many points the British fire has paralyzed the enemy's offensive.

Invaders Gain Mountain.

BERLIN, via London, Nov. 17.—Austro-German forces invading the northern provinces of Italy yesterday stormed Monte Prassolan, between the Brenta and Piave rivers, says the official statement issued today by the German general staff. Eight hundred Italians were taken prisoner.

THREE KILLED IN AUTO CRASH; 2 OFFICERS HURT

Champaign, Ill., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Mrs. Benedict, wife of Maj. C. C. Benedict; their 7 year old son, and Mrs. Behrens, wife of Capt. Conrad Behrens, were killed, and Maj. Benedict and Capt. Behrens were severely injured late this afternoon when an automobile in which they were riding was struck by an Illinois Traction system train at the western limits of this city. It is believed both officers will recover.

Maj. Benedict is in charge of an aviation class at Chanute field, and Capt. Behrens is in charge of the hospital at that camp.

Dwiggins, Held by Police, Reveals War Bond Deposits

New York, Nov. 17.—Elmer Dwiggins, former New York manager of the Bankers' Life Insurance company of Des Moines, who was arrested at Montgomery, Ala., on a charge of defrauding investors in Liberty loan bonds, was brought back here tonight.

The prisoner told the district attorney he did not think a shortage would be found in the money he had collected for sales of the second issue of bonds, as he had left $34,000 worth in his office safe here, and has $20,000 worth more in a safety deposit vault, besides $35,000 in cash on deposit with three large banks in this city.

What amount of money Dwiggins had lost in Wall street speculation was not revealed by the authorities.

HOUSE FALLS; 9 BELIEVED KILLED

Montreal, Nov. 17.—Nine persons are believed to have been killed tonight when an old house in Canning street collapsed. Several others were injured seriously. The bodies of a man and a girl have been found in the ruins by the police, who are continuing the search.

Historian Is First Premier of the New Polish State

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 17.—A dispatch from Berlin says that Prof. Jan Kucharzewski, a well known historian, has been appointed as the first premier of the new Polish state.

U. S. MISSION IS WARMLY PRAISED BY KING GEORGE

LONDON, Nov. 17.—Lord Northcliffe authorizes the Associated Press to state that in an audience extending over an hour today he heard from the lips of King George at Buckingham palace his majesty's view of the present state of the war and the world importance of American intervention.

Speaking of the American mission and of Col. House, whom he had known for a number of years, King George said that the personnel of the American mission displayed knowledge and alertness indicative of the American character and purpose.

Lord Northcliffe was surprised by the king's intimate knowledge of the possibilities of aircraft production in the United States, his great interest in the Liberty engine, his knowledge of the men who have evolved it, and the method by which it has been produced.

Col House said in the course of a long conversation tonight that the consultations between the American and British government representatives are now rapidly nearing a focus which will make possible an accurate view of the necessities of the situation and the problems requiring solution. He expressed complete confidence that on the basis of the exchange of information and understanding between the members of the mission and the officials of the British government, such a complete mobilization of material and resources against Germany would be effected soon as would guarantee the success of the allies in the war.

Outlying Firms May Not Bring Mail to Save Cent

Tax dodgers of a new sort have been discovered. A number of corporations, with manufacturing plants near Chicago, have been bringing their mail into the city to post recently to get advantage of the 2 cent rate on Chicago mail, according to postoffice officials. Postmaster Carlile, after reporting the matter, announced yesterday that the department will not stand for the subterfuge to evade the 3 cent intercity rate on letters, under the new war tax.

Youth Threatens Son of Edsel Ford; Gets 5 Years

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 17.—Jacob Yellin, a Detroit youth, was convicted by a federal court jury here today of sending a threatening letter demanding ransom to Edsel Ford, son of the automobile manufacturer. Yellin was sentenced to five years in Leavenworth prison and also was fined $1,000. The letter which Ford received demanded $10,000 as the price for the safety of his baby son, Henry Ford II.

IN RUSSIA

Cossacks establish own government over whole territory north of the Caucasus between the Caspian and Black seas.

Thirty thousand Lettish soldiers aid rebels in defeating Kerensky's army.

Correspondents find aristocratic officers in command of Bolsheviki troops and a complete lack of sympathy throughout Russia for Kerensky because of his temporizing with the Bolsheviki and his destruction of discipline in the army.

Japanese flee from Siberian cities because of battles and rioting between Maximalists and Cossacks.

WAR ON VARIOUS FRONTS

Rome reports that the German troops which forced a crossing of the Piave river at Zenson are being pressed back steadily by the Italians. Two more crossings of the Piave were effected by the Germans. At Follina the German troops were destroyed or captured. At Fagare they were driven back to the embankment and their return was hindered.

The Turkish forces which have been falling back before the British advance in Palestine are preparing to make a stand north of Jaffa.

Further progress was made by the British troops on the main ridge in the vicinity of Passchendaele on the Belgian battle front.

WAR TAX EXCUSE FOR RAISING CIGARET PRICE?

Introducing cigaret camouflage:

A smoker went into a cigar store yesterday. He laid 16 cents on the mahogany:

"A package of ——," he said blithely, naming a well known brand. The dealer pushed back the odd penny.

"They are only 15 cents now," he smiled. This dazed the smoker. He picked up the cigarets and the penny and walked abstractedly down the street. Then he noticed that the package in his hand did not feel just right. He counted the cigarets. There were only 16 instead of the usual twenty.

Another brand that was sold in packages of twenty at 13 cents now sells at sixteen for a dime.

SECRET AGENT OF BERNSTORFF IS JAILED HERE

Service Number Is Revealed on a "Blind" Card.

Joseph W. Noth, German secret service agent employed by Count von Bernstorff and Capt. von Papen, and trusted messenger of Baron Kurt von Reiswitz, former German consul in Chicago, "vanished" into a Chicago jail last night.

When Noth was arrested, among his effects was found a plain white card. Federal agents were about to pass it as of no consequence when one of them held it to the light. This revealed a deftly concealed German coat of arms, secret markings, and a serial number. Operatives say that Noth has admitted this serial is his number with the German secret service and the card his identification.

When faced with letters taken from his effects, signed by both Von Bernstorff and Von Reiswitz, he admitted he had been in their employ, but insisted it was before the United States declared war. Since then, he says, he has not been connected with the German secret service.

Not Registered as Alien.

Noth, the government has found out, was born in Baden, Germany, twenty-eight years ago. He had no registration card nor was he registered as an enemy alien. He came to Chicago about seven months ago and it is asserted has posed as a United States secret service agent.

The story of his capture and arrest is an interesting one. Shortly after his arrival here he presented himself at the Mooney & Boland detective agency and was employed. Soon after he was put to work the agency became suspicious of him and a conference was held with federal officials.

It was then learned that the United States was interested in him. William J. Sutherland, president and general manager of the Mooney & Boland agency, put Noth on his payroll and then put another man on to do nothing but watch Noth.

Was Always Shadowed.

As a result Noth was shadowed wherever he went until it was decided that evidence against him was conclusive. The detective agency "worked" him regularly in matters of investigation. He was called into the office yesterday as if to receive an assignment. A federal operative was waiting to take him into custody.

Among the letters seized, signed by Von Bernstorff and Von Reiswitz, were several which had been "doctored," probably by Noth, so that it is impossible to decipher their meaning.

Though the signatures of Von Bernstorff and Von Reiswitz are there, many words have been carefully cut out, clear through the paper, evidently with a sharp knife, leaving the text of the original letters unintelligible.

Government detectives are investigating these letters to find out if it is possible that they might be used in some manner as a key to decipher some secret code, an art in which the Germans are exceptionally adept.

Von Reiswitz Activity.

Baron von Reiswitz, it will be remembered, was indicted after revelations of his plottings here. While he was mingling with north side society, witnesses told, he was plotting many things, among them a revolt in India, to finance which he sent $40,000 at one time to Manila.

Four men were convicted in Chicago recently of connection with these plots. One witness testified that he had been hired to blow up munition plants. Before the baron was indicted he was permitted to return to Germany.

Two Are Interned.

The week has been an exceptionally good one for the secret service and the department of justice. Papers authorizing the internment of Harold J. F. Kleffner and Gus Kueckmann, both Germans, were issued yesterday. Kueckmann, a baker by trade, 27 years old, was arrested after he had been shadowed for a month.

He had no visible means of support, lived in a luxurious manner, spent money freely, and intimated to those among whom he associated that he was about to engage in business.

Edward Buttjarriet, 39 years old, 6713 Aberdeen street, and Frank Kary, 62 years old, 3541 North Robey street, both Germans, are under arrest at the central station. They were taken into custody after Buttjarriet had assaulted Otto Falk, justice of the peace at Gross Point.

LATE NEWS BULLETINS

LONDON, Nov. 17.—A Reuter's, Limited, dispatch from Petrograd dated Nov. 16, says: "Maximalist troops have occupied Gatchina and Premier Kerensky's staff has been arrested. The maximalist council of commissioners has proclaimed the right of the different peoples of Russia to the self-determination of their form of government, including separation and the formation of independent states.

"Three-quarters of Moscow are reported in the hands of the maximalists."

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 17.—The government has proclaimed a state of siege in the federal district and in the states of Rio Janeiro, Sao Paulo, Parana, Santa Catharina, and Rio Grande do Sol.

STOCKHOLM, Nov. 17.—Advices received here from Finland say that the entire country is in the complete control of the Socialists, who are supported by armed workers and Russian Bolsheviki soldiers.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, Nov. 17.—Gen. Pershing today returned to his headquarters from a visit to his troops in the first line trenches and the support in the rear.

Night patrolling continues active and contact with the enemy's patrols has been established several times, shots being exchanged. The Germans have sent over more gas shells, but they caused no damage.

TERRIFIC FIGHT OFF HELGOLAND; GERMANS FLEE

Explosions Are Heard Like Blowing Up of Magazines.

BULLETIN.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 17.—Advices from the island of Mano say that a most violent cannonading was heard from the North sea between 8:30 and 10 o'clock this morning. At intervals during the firing there were great explosions. Several warships were observed on the horizon.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—British light forces today engaged German light cruisers off Helgoland, the British admiralty announced today. The German warships retired and the British forces are now chasing them. The announcement follows:

"British light forces operating in Helgoland bight have been engaged with German light forces this morning. The only information we have received thus far is that our vessels have engaged enemy light cruisers, that the latter had retired at high speed and that our vessels are in pursuit."

Delay Further Details.

It is not likely that any details of the naval engagement will be received until the British ships return to port, as it is not customary for them to send wireless reports of their movements and actions while close to the enemy bases.

On the few occasions when British cruisers, which constantly are sweeping the North sea, have been able to encounter German war vessels the enemy's tactics have been of the hit and run character. They hurry toward home with the purpose of trying to bring the British into their mine fields and, if possible, under fire of the large land guns.

The bare facts embodied in this morning's official bulletin from the British admiralty indicate that in this engagement the Germans followed their usual tactics.

STRONG NAVAL BASE.

Helgoland is a small island in the North sea near the German coast. In area it is only about one-fifth of a square mile, but Germany, by an expenditure of nearly $50,000,000 before the war, made it one of the strongest naval bases in Europe.

The island is of chalk formation and was gradually being washed away when in the possession of Great Britain. It was ceded to Germany by treaty in 1890.

Germany has created a vast sea wall of concrete and built docks and defenses, making the island almost impregnable. It commands the entrance to the Kiel canal and is known as "the Gibraltar of the North sea."

U. S. SLEUTHS NAB SUSPECTS AT AUDITORIUM

1 Defect Rendered Infernal Machine Harmless.

Fred Miller, a decorator employed at the Auditorium theater, who admits being an alien enemy, was arrested last night by city detectives and government operatives for inquiry on the theory that he might be the man who placed the bomb in the theater Friday night. Last night it was said Miller is being held for further investigation.

His arrest came after the police had been told that Miller had escaped from an internment camp in Canada. He was taken in the lobby of the Auditorium theater and questioned in the office of Chief of Detectives Mooney. Miller denied that he had placed the bomb or had escaped from a detention camp and said he was in Chicago because he could make good money here.

No Evidence Found.

His home was searched by the police, but nothing of incriminating nature was found. Miller gave his age as 47 years. He lives at 1741 Sedgwick street. It was said last night that the police had practically given up the theory that Miller was connected with the outrage.

H. M. Johnson, manager of the Auditorium theater, denied last night that Miller was employed by the grand opera company or the theater. Later it was admitted that he was an employé of John J. Weber, interior decorator doing work in the theater.

One other man is also held in connection with the matter, but the police and government officials both refused to reveal his identity.

One Defect in Bomb.

One oversight, and only one, on the part of the maker of the bomb rendered it harmless and saved a probable loss of life in the audience. This oversight was the fact that no detonating cap was fixed in the head of the bomb where the fuse entered.

In the bomb was found when it was examined yesterday a quantity of black powder, thirty-nine pellets about the size of buckshot, some round and some cubical in shape, and a little of what was apparently sawdust. Each pellet weighed a little more than a quarter of an ounce.

A home made rag fuse, chemically treated to make it burn, was run through a hole in the end of the screw cap which inclosed the powder and bullets. Chief Schuettler last night expressed the belief that the man who lighted the fuse held either a burning cigaret or cigar stub in the palm of his hand as he sat in the audience at the opera.

Experts Explain Failure.

The failure of the powder to explode for lack of detonating cap is explained in this manner by the experts on explosives. The explosive power of powder comes with the rapidity with which it is set off in comparison with the area of confinement.

Powder, lying in the open air, will burn with a bright light and little noise if a match is applied. Shut it in an imperfectly closed bomb, like the one found, and light it and it will blow out of the hole in the end like a "fizzle" firecracker. But close the end of the bomb with a detonation cap and when the cap explodes the powder will "let go" at once.

This is the explosion, and it was the one factor the bomb found in the auditorium was lacking. The authorities last night declined to comment upon how it happened that George Barnitz and Michael Santaniello, foremost bomb experts of the New York police, "happened" to be in Chicago on the day the bomb was discovered.

Expert in Hindu Case.

Barnitz is the man whose expert testimony in the recent "Hindu bomb plots" in Chicago was a considerable factor in getting the convictions of a number of defendants, among them Gustav Jacobsen, wealthy Chicagoan convicted of plotting with German secret agents. Mr. Barnitz himself declined to explain the reason for his presence in Chicago.

It is known that the seats immediately around where the bomb was found were sold out considerably in advance and that the management of the house is supposed to have a list of the buyers.

If the seats had not been sold and resold it is believed that the secret service operatives and police will know every one who sat nearby before another day passes.

Charles F. Clyne, United States district attorney, refused to discuss the bomb last night, saying that the investigation might come under his department and so he was bound to silence.

The police last night also began looking for a man who is reported to have run toward the door at the first flash of the bomb crying loudly, "Fire! Fire!"

It is claimed that this man, when he had passed out, looked around and, seeing that the audience was not panic-stricken, returned to the exit and cried "Fire!" several times again.

It was established, incidentally, that it was Detective Sergt. Edward Eisenberg of the first deputy's office who grabbed up the bomb and carried it into the street. It was at first reported the explosive was seized by Battalion Chief Corrigan. Eisenberg said he picked it up and handed it to Corrigan, who threw it into the street.

Chief Schuettler Hot.

Chief Schuettler was mad through at the thought of what might have happened in the theater.

"I think it possible some one was trying to play a practical joke," he said. "But if that is true they are in for just as much trouble as if they had been in earnest. That is the wrong kind of a practical joke, and the investigation will not be stopped."

Witness Describes Fire.

P. S. Goodman, who was sitting a short distance from the bomb, said yesterday:

"Shortly after the opera began people in my section noticed a sulphurous, acrid odor. A minute or two later occupants in the end of the third row of seats from the division in the hall left. It appeared to issue from the floor, as if from an opening. I had a clear view of the place, being in the line of seats on the other side of the aisle.

"The fire burned with a chrome yellow flame, in a bushlike formation about eighteen inches high. It developed a bluish smoke on the outside which dissipated into an acrid odor. I saw a man try to stamp out the fire, and it seemed as if a liquid was spreading from the stamping. Then three or four men peeled off their dress coats and threw them on the flames and trampled the coats until the fire was smothered.

Praises Audience.

"I have rarely seen such self-possession among men and women under panic conditions as was shown by those who were near the bomb. A woman who was sitting where the fire blazed found her slipper in flames, and it looked to me as if some liquid had been thrown on the slipper, as it was burning at several places. With remarkable coolness she took off her slipper and preserved her calmness while her escort with his hands beat out the flames which had started at the edge of her gown.

"At no time did any hysteria develop among the people near the danger section. Those in the seats near by helped the women to the aisle and the men stood aside to let them pass out quietly."

Bomb Found in Factory.

Beloit, Wis., Nov. 17.—An unexploded bomb filled with steel slugs was found today at the factory of Burgess & Sons. Search is being made to determine if others have been planted.

Threaten Suit After Shooting in Edgewater

Post-climax of a shooting that occurred on the night of Oct. 29 in Sheridan road, near the Edgewater Beach hotel, came last night with the insertion of a "Personal" in THE TRIBUNE want ad section for the "lady and gentleman who witnessed it to call Sunnyside 7284 at once."

Albert Ziegler, manager of the Sheridan Storage company, who lives at 6337 Magnolia avenue, met John A. Brown, 952 Lawrence avenue, on that night. The two grappled, after Mr. Ziegler is alleged to have said he would give Mr. Brown "the busiest ten minutes of your life." Brown was shot through the thigh. The trouble was said to have been caused through domestic affairs.

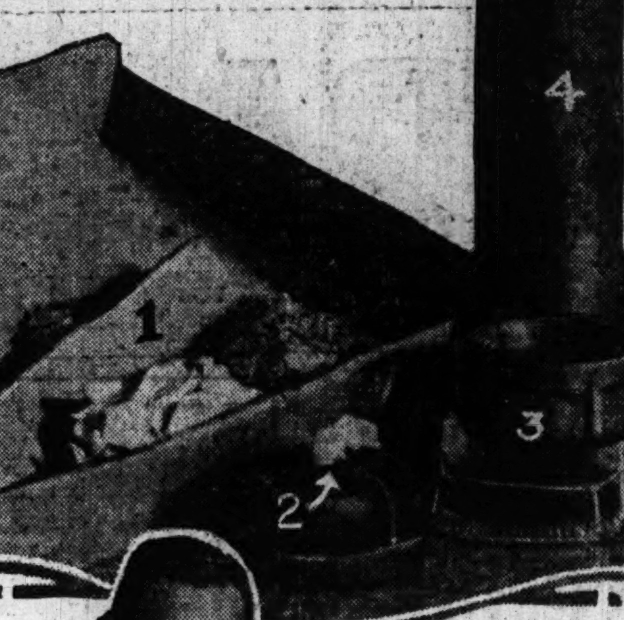
A reporter last night called Sunnyside 7284 and Mrs. Brown answered the telephone. She said they intended to prosecute Mr. Ziegler and that the man and woman who witnessed the shooting were wanted as witnesses.

Hunter to Get Job in War Risk Bureau, Report

A report was received from Washington yesterday that Joel D. Hunter, chief probation officer of the Juvenile court, was to be appointed deputy commissioner in the war risk bureau of the treasury department. Mr. Hunter said he had received no notification of such an appointment, but that he would accept it if it were made. He has not resigned, he said.

BOMB BUSINESS

Expert Dissects Contrivance Which Menaced Opera Goers and Points Out Its Defects.



George Barnitz

George Barnitz, New York bomb expert, who "happened" to be in Chicago the day the bomb was put in the Auditorium theater, is shown examining the cylinder which contained the explosive. No. 1—Contents of bomb, powder, and pellets. No. 2—The faulty fuse end of the bomb, with arrow pointing to the fuse hole which made the whole thing harmless because it lacked a "detonating cap," so allowing powder to burn out harmlessly. No. 3—Cap on the other end of the bomb; solid metal. No. 4—The cylinder, carefully machined and with threads upon which the two end caps were tightly screwed down.

VILLA CALLS ON ALL IN MEXICO TO FOLLOW HIM

Pomises Ideal Nation with Overthrow of Carranza.

Presidio, Tex., Nov. 17.—Francisco Villa, at his headquarters in Ojinaga, opposite here, today authorized the following statement for the Associated Press:

"Upon taking possession by force of arms of this town, which I found in the power of the so-called Constitutionalists, who criminally defended it for Venustiano Carranza, the traitor and despot, I think it my duty to make the following declarations in order that once more my aims and motives may be shown to the world to be patriotic and noble.

"First of all, I have no personal ambitions, but my earnest desire, which I have already expressed, is that my people may obtain unity and my country peace. To that end, I bring together the principal revolutionists who since 1910 have been striving to attain that end.

Promises to Be Magnanimous.

"Contrary to everything they have said of me, I wish to make it known that I will strive with valor and decision against the enemy, but I will be magnanimous in victory, the proof of which was the recent occurrence here of turning over to the Carranza consul in Presidio, Tex., the Carranza wounded who were made prisoners in Ojinaga, and also the release of prisoners taken, incorporating them in our army because they decided they were on the wrong side.

"I wish now to make a solemn call to all Mexicans in general, and in particular to Carranza soldiers, to notice how I have conducted myself in comparison with the conduct of Francisco Murguia, in the state of Chihuahua, and others, because these chiefs assassinate and torment all those who fight against them. In comparison to this, I offer all guarantees to friend and foe alike.

Unite and Save Republic.

"I wish here also to make a formal and energetic protest before the Mexican nation and the world of the inhumanity of the laws of suspension of guarantees just decreed by Carranza. I offer all guarantees that the said Carranza government has without conscience declared void. The Mexicans who are honorable and patriotic can come then to my side without fear, so that we may all unite and save the republic.

"The papers of Mexico and the United States recently published in sensational form the notice that I was asking for peace with Carranza. I declare emphatically that this notice is false. Furthermore, I will never ask of Carranza more than before. Patriotism and justice above all.

Would Punish Traitors.

"Because of this I have striven, and will strive without rest until I obtain it for all, whoever they may be, and above all my desire is to see the desert, the plains, and mountains rise with men tired of the infamy of Carranza and his ministers and, repeating history, rise up against the traitors and punish them as they deserve.

"During last July I made a statement which appeared in the American papers in which I invited Gen. Francisco Murguia to personal combat on ground of his own choosing. To this day I have had no answer.

"I wish to make it public on this occasion that I have never fought for fortune's sake, and it is absurd and ridiculous to accuse me of it.

"I repeat that my strongest desires are and will be to make happy and to unite the people of my country."

FOR SURGICAL DRESSINGS.

A "liberty" dance on Saturday and a bazaar at 1416 North Dearborn parkway next Sunday have been planned for the benefit of the Lake Shore drive surgical dressing unit. The affair is in charge of Mrs. Archibald Freer, who will be assisted by Miss Myrtle May Sturey.

COSSACKS SET UP REPUBLIC IN SOUTH RUSSIA

Control Vast Granary of Nation; All Turn on Kerensky.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—Don Cossacks have established a government of their own over the whole territory north of the Caucasus between the Caspian and Black seas.

Following a conference at Novo Tcherkask, capital of the Don territory, Gen. Kaledines, hetman of the Don Cossacks, assumed full power in the Don territories and established contact with Cossack governments in the neighboring territories.

Backed by the Cossacks in the provinces of Kuban and Astrakhan, the Kalmuks of the Steppes and the mountain tribes of Daghestan and the Black sea coast, the Don Cossacks formed a league of autonomous units with a common federal government.

The cossack congress, which was sitting at Kiev, took command of the situation there and immediately arrested the Ukrainian council and suppressed the Bolsheviki.

No Sympathy for Kerensky.

Nowhere throughout a journey from the Caucasus to Petrograd did a correspondent of the Daily Telegraph hear a word of sympathy for Premier Kerensky. The educated passengers he met he says in a dispatch sent from Petrograd on Monday, were infuriated at Kerensky's laxity in permitting the Bolsheviki agitation and soldiers were indignant that the premier was unable to maintain authority and order.

30,000 Letts Aid Rebels.

HAPARANDA, Sweden, Friday, Nov. 16.—Information reaching Haparanda from Petrograd indicates that the defeat of Premier Kerensky came in consequence of the intervention of Lettish forces amounting to 30,000 men on the side of the Maximalists. The power of the Maximalists at Petrograd is said to have been strengthened.

Japs Flee from Siberia.

TOKIO, Nov. 17.—Severe rioting is in progress in several Siberian cities as the result of the latest Russian upheaval, according to messages received here from Vladivostok and Harbin today.

Many Japanese are fleeing Siberia and returning to their homes as the result of the trouble.

New Revolt in Moscow.

PETROGRAD, Friday, Nov. 16.—The damage done to the Kremlin in Moscow is minimized in messages received here from the Maximalist delegates in the old Russian capital, who say that only the Alexander palace has suffered. They confirm the burning of several houses in Moscow.

A third armed force is said to have developed in Moscow, the identity of which is not known. It is said to be fighting against both the Bolsheviki and the government troops and is supposed to be composed of the criminal elements released from jail.

Deserted by most of his officers and virtually ordered to surrender to the Bolsheviki, Premier Kerensky evaded the guards sent for him and has disappeared.

Loses Sympathy of Soldiers.

"At 3 o'clock on the afternoon of Nov. 14, I called at the quarters of the commander in chief," Gen. Krasnoff said. "He appeared nervous and excited.

"'General,' said he, 'you have betrayed me. Your Cossacks say they will arrest me and give me up to the sailors.'

"'Yes,' I answered, 'such a discussion is now going on. There appears to be little sympathy for you.'

"'Do the officers feel the same way?' he asked.

"'Yes.'

"'What shall I do? Will I have to commit suicide?'

"'If you are an honest man you will go to Petrograd under a white flag and appear before the revolutionary committee, where you will negotiate as head of the government.'

"Kerensky agreed to this and he was promised a guard. He objected to a guard of sailors on the ground that some enemies were among them. He wanted to wait until night but finally agreed to make the trip by daylight. I went and called Col. Kishkoff of the Tenth Don Cossacks and ordered him to appoint a guard of eight men. A half an hour after the Cossacks told me that Kerensky could not be found. I raised the alarm, thinking that he could not have left Gatchina."

M. Bibenko, member of the committee on war and marine, has reported to the Workmen's and Soldiers' congress that Kerensky fled garbed as a sailor

U. S. GIRL TELLS EYE-WITNESS STORY OF HOT BATTLE FOR PETROGRAD TELEPHONE BUILDING

BY BESSIE BEATTY.

[Copyright: 1917: By Press Publishing Company (New York World).]

PETROGRAD, Tuesday, Nov. 13, via London, Nov. 17.—Last Sunday afternoon I spent several hours in the hottest place of the revolution. I was in the telephone building while a squad of sixty cadets of the officers' school tried to hold it against Bolsheviki sailors and the Red Guard.

It was 1 o'clock when I entered the telephone building and 7 when the last frightened telephone operator slipped away in the darkness and the last terrified cadet marched off between his sailor captors.

At noon I was sitting in my room in my hotel wondering at the quiet, which was broken only by church bells, when two shots crashed the silence. I hurried upstairs. A group of officers turned me back, so I took the elevator and dropped down to the lobby of the hotel in time to see an armored car halt before the door and a group of cadets enter and line the revolutionary guard against the wall, disarm them, and imprison them in the basement.

Boy Officer in Command.

A boy officer, with a cigaret in his mouth, a revolver in hand, directed the proceedings. I followed the officer down the Morskaya to the telephone building two blocks below, where a couple of touring cars had been placed across the street to barricade traffic. The crowd was warned back by the cadets, rifles in hands. In the doorway was an American Socialist talking to some cadets. Albert Rhys Williams, a fellow correspondent, pulled me into the shelter of the entrance.

We went up to the manager's office and asked to see the operators who, at the end of the third recapture of the building, were at the breaking down point. We found 300 girls at the switchboards plugging while rifles cracked outside the windows. At 2 o'clock the firing began at both ends of the block as the sailors attacked the cadets.

Build Barricade in Street.

The boys had built barricades of boxes and boards across the sidewalks. They took up positions behind the frail protection and fired at the revolutionary forces in both directions. Some hid behind motor trucks and rested their guns on the engines. Some lay flat in the mud of the street and fired from underneath the trucks.

I watched the fight first from the courtyard, then upstairs from a front window where I could look down the street. At 3 o'clock the firing was intense and the manager told the girls they could leave their positions.

Twenty stuck all through. Some with deep circles under their eyes, faces pale, hands trembling, huddled together or fled in one direction or another as the firing marked the danger points. A hundred or more stayed at their posts until 4 o'clock, when the firing was at its height and the panic was greatest, and the twenty operators stood to the switchboards until the building surrendered.

Peace Parley Refused.

To a room on the second floor Antonoff, head of the Bolsheviki war ministry, was taken from an automobile with a sailor and half a dozen other prisoners. The crowd outside the building was led by a workingman. The Red Guard, reinforced by sailors, learned that Antonoff was in the building. They also had another grudge against the cadets, some of whom, captured at the winter palace, had broken their parole.

In the middle of the afternoon the cadets tried to start a peace parley, offering to surrender to Antonoff if they were allowed to go free themselves.

"We will take Antonoff from you and kill every last one of you," was the answer sent back. The boys became desperate as the older officers who were directing them disappeared.

Red Cross Auto Brings Bombs.

"Why doesn't Kerensky come?" they asked again and again. Their stock of ammunition diminished and a Red Cross automobile dashed up to the building, left a box of hand grenades, and departed.

At 4 o'clock I was moved from the window. The forces outside were pressing closer, the street barricades were abandoned by the cadets, who poured upstairs to the front windows, smashed the glass with the butts of their rifles, and took new places of defense.

Woman Handles Machine Gun.

I walked to a window overlooking the courtyard. A machine gun was mounted on a box and a woman with quick fingers filled and refilled cartridge tape. Two cadets passed bearing a wounded comrade, shot in the abdomen and the arms.

A Polish boy whom I had seen previously command a squad of ten at the winter palace and guard the doors of the provisional government was talking now to a pretty Polish girl operator. A janitor in civilian clothes passed and she implored him to give his clothes to the cadet so that he might escape.

"If you are a man you will give him your coat," she pleaded. But the janitor refused. He was a workman and was not helping the cadets.

Disguises Self as Cook.

When the sailors were mounting the stairs the boy went to the kitchen, slipped into a white cap and coat of a cook, poured himself a cup of tea, sat drinking when the sailors came through. Thus he escaped.

In the pantry I found another boy officer with a bread knife trying to saw the buttons from his coat and another tearing frantically at his epaulets.

"Tell him I can help another way," Williams told an interpreter. The boy hurried away, his face white with terror and with burning eyes. It was the tensest moment I ever felt.

"If I could only speak Russian," I cried. I walked away and Williams followed.

"Find him," he called. "I cannot give him my coat, but I can leave it and he can come and take it."

I ran down stairs jostling groups of frightened men and women and stumbled into a room where most of the cadets had gathered to await the end. But the young officer was nowhere to be found. I returned to Williams, who was now in a passion.

"Perhaps I can do something with Antonoff," he said. "Where are the boys?"

I led him and he offered to make terms of surrender for them and guarantee their safety.

"Please help us; save us," the boys cried.

Arrange Terms of Surrender.

Now the Red Guard and sailors were crowding the court yard firing everybody was paralyzed into inaction. I waited breathless for two minutes, when Williams returned, Antonoff with him.

"Taverish (Comrade) Antonoff, save our lives," the cadets cried.

"Where are your officers?" asked Antonoff.

"They all left us," they answered.

The terms of surrender were quickly arranged and Antonoff and Williams started downstairs to face the crowd.

Stirred by American's Plea.

The men of the Red guard recognized their leader.

"Antonoff," they shouted, "where are the junkers [cadets]?" Maddened by the loss of their own men fallen in the street and by the broken parole of the cadets, they were eager to be upstairs.

"I have given my word of honor as a revolutionist," Antonoff said, "that the boys shall not be killed, and as revolutionists you must keep that word."

Williams recognized in the crowd some sailors, republicans, of the Baltic fleet.

"If you kill the junkers, it will be useless massacre," he said. "I know the temptation, but the idols of your revolution will be sullied if you yield to it."

Better Death Than Dishonor.

A vote was taken, and the sailors lifted their hands in assent to the terms of surrender. A few of the Red guard dissented. Antonoff turned to them.

"I have made the terms of surrender," he said, "and I will myself shoot the first man who harms one of the junkers."

"Shoot us?" they queried.

"Yes," he answered. "I would rather we all die than this American should say the revolutionists of Russia are base and revengeful."

Turns Over Prisoners.

A committee from the city duma arrived, and as the cadets filed downstairs Antonoff took the hand of the first and turned him over to the soldiers.

"It is number one," he said, "and I trust his life in your hands. Guard it for the honor of the revolution."

As the last cadet passed, a sailor said, "The last of the trash," but he was quickly hurried away by his comrades.

The girls in the telephone exchange slipped quietly out.

VISIT TO WAR FRONT CONVERTS A CONGRESSMAN

Dill of Washington Now Convinced Cause of Allies Is Just.

BY LOWELL MELLETT.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—About six months ago Representative Dill of Washington voted against war. Today, after completing a visit to the British, French, and Belgian fronts, he said:

"I saw much to confirm me in the resolve that we must fight to the finish.

"If I had to do it over again, I'd vote the same way."

"Impossible," I said.

"No," Dill resumed; "I voted in the Calls It a Just War.

"But the war is now a fact. A further fact is that it is a just war, as far as we allies are concerned.

"It must be won. This is my conclusion, and it is not the result of conversations with British leaders, with President Poincaré, Prof. Painleve and other French statesmen, or with that fine, democratic king, Albert of Belgium, who, by the way, is apparently more interested in suffrage than in any other American development, but in conversations which I have had with private soldiers and with civilians of the three countries.

"I haven't changed my opinion that war is a most hateful business, but I am convinced that America must utilize every resource to stamp out the military spirit forever.

Why His Views Changed.

"Germany's campaign of abominations must not succeed.

"We American congressmen saw the ruins of Bapaume, which the Germans evacuated and in which they left time bombs hidden away and designed to explode nine days after the civilians had reoccupied the city.

"This was one of the most damnable episodes in the history of warfare. It outclasses the infamy of poisoned wells, of ruined homes, of desolated villages.

"It makes it possible for every one to understand the 'no quarter' attitude of Americans at the front—even if the deliberate cutting of the throat of one American victim in the German raid had not made this possible."

GERMANS' HATE CENTERED UPON TROOPS OF U. S.

Leaders Instill Rivalry to Kill or Seize Our Soldiers.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—Further details of the Germans' special effort to trap American soldiers in the front line trenches on Nov. 3, on the occasion of the invaders' first raid on the American trenches and which resulted in numerous casualties to the defenders, have been brought to London by the party of American congressmen now visiting France and England. Congressman Taylor of Colorado said:

"Our men were detailed to a position on the front line for observation at 3 o'clock in the morning. There had been a lull during the night, but signs of activity of the enemy during the early hours of the morning had been followed by this stationing of our men in advantageous positions for observation.

Searched Out with Lights.

"The German attack followed the enemy's sweeping of the position as usual with illuminating rockets, by means of which it is presumed the Germans located the American force. Their artillery fire appeared to be concentrated on that point, and they accepted their hurriedly conceived object in smashing our little squad of observers who were out there to gain experience.

"The attack seems to confirm reports that the German commanders have inculcated a spirit of rivalry among their troops for the taking of first American prisoners and to make a showing in American casualties. It is commonly reported on all the fronts that the Germans have transferred their vindictiveness and hatred of the English to our men."

MORE AMERICANS SLAIN.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Nov. 17.—More American lives have been lost in the fight against Prussia. Some of the men wounded in the last two days have died.

Additional casualties were caused when an enemy shell struck an American gun and exploded.

Shrapnel also has wounded some of the men in the trenches.

The artillery fighting in the sector held by the Americans has become more active.

The American batteries have been firing rapidly in return of the fire of the Germans. The visibility is becoming better and it is considered certain that more damage and casualties have been caused in the German lines than the Germans have inflicted on the Americans.

Patrolling continued actively last night.

Congressmen in Danger.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

BRITISH FRONT IN BELGIUM, Nov. 16.—Five members of the party of American congressmen and private citizens who spent yesterday and part of today visiting the Belgian war zone had a narrow escape from death or injury this morning when they were caught in a sudden burst of German machine gun fire while inspecting the front line trenches near Dixmude.

The Americans in danger were Congressman C. C. Dill of Spokane, Wash.; Congressman Charles B. Timberlake of Colorado; Congressman John F. Miller of Seattle, Wash.; Congressman Albert Johnson of Washington, and former Representative Stout of Montana.

Nobody was hit, but it was one of those peculiar freaks of fortune which soldiers call luck, because the shots came in a shower so close to them it seemed almost certain some one must be wounded.

In Peril Second Time.

The other seven members of the party were in another section of the trench and were not disturbed by the fire. Later, however, when all the Americans were together the Germans dropped a big shell some ten yards away, seriously endangering every one. One member in describing the incident to the correspondent later said he and his companions heard the shell coming. "It sounded like the roar of an airplane," he said.

KAISER CALLS ITALIAN LOSS ACT OF GOD

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 17.—Advices from Berlin say that the German emperor, in addressing a Brandenburg regiment on the Italian front, recalled the soldiers' share in the battles of the Champagne, at Verdun and Tarnopol. The emperor said:

"But you have had a greater task, that of breaking through the Italian front—a heavy task considering the high mountains and the enemy's immense means of defense. Your success exceeds all calculations so greatly that a higher power than the power of man must have been at work. The enemy's collapse was the judgment of God."

In a later speech the German emperor said:

"We are fighting for faithfulness, justice, and truth, and it is these that will win."

ELKS DEDICATE NEW CLUBHOUSE WITH BANQUET

Elks from all over the country sat down last night at the Hotel Sherman at a banquet which was the dedication of the new home of Elks' lodge No. 4, Chicago. Fred Harper, grand exalted ruler, of Lynchburg, Va., gave a patriotic toast in which he said:

"The Stars and Stripes are today engaged in battling for the holiest cause in all history. We cannot stop now until the unspeakable Hun is beaten and the kaiser kicked from his throne. Though the tricolor may weaken, waver, and fall; though England may be forced out of the conflict, we must fight on."

4,000 Purchasers Patronize Town of Leyden Market Day and Buy Direct from the Producer.

Anna Howitz

Men, women, boys, and little girls to the number of over 4,000 attended the "Town of Leyden Market Day" at the end of the Grand avenue street car line yesterday afternoon and before dusk the "sold out" sign had been hung out. Neighboring farmers brought their produce in wagons and auto trucks and gave the consumer the opportunity of buying direct from the producer.

Thousands of heads of cabbage ranging from 5 to 10 cents per head were sold. Carrots went for 2 to 2½ cents a bunch, and so did beets. Squashes were bought as low as 7 cents and some of the little girls and boys took away pumpkins almost as big as themselves for 15 cents.

The market day was presided over by Thomas W. Hart, country life director of the division who initiated and planned the movement. Minimum and maximum prices agreed upon by the school garden members, truck growers, farmers, and the Cook county school system prevailed. Fifteen truck farmers brought their produce and they all left empty handed. Fred Mahler sold 1,800 heads of cabbage and 40 bags of onions to over 1,000 customers.

ELOPES WITH DAUGHTER, THEN BEATS UP DAD

Jackie Weds 14 Year Old Child of Zion City Clergyman.

Zion City will be astir with excitement today when it is learned that Grace Schumaker, the 14 year old daughter of Van Buren Schumaker, pastor of Zion tabernacle in Chicago, eloped last Thursday with Frank Knappen, a 17 year old jackie at the Great Lakes Naval Training station.

The sailor boy was assisted in getting the bride out of Zion City by her brother, Victor Schumaker, a member of the band of the United States navy. In fact, it was the girl's brother who planned the elopement. Four days before that he himself was married to Mayme Foulmer of Chicago without parental approval.

Scarcely Knew Her.

Young Knappen scarcely knew the daughter of Pastor Schumaker, having met her but once or twice. The first time he met her was two months ago. Victor invited him to visit Zion City, where the Schumaker family reside.

A month later Victor and Knappen made another visit to Zion City. This time they were accompanied by a jackie named Rayburn. The three of them, by accident, bumped into Mrs. Schumaker and her daughter as they were on their way to the tabernacle. Unconsciously Grace nodded to Knappen, and the sign of recognition was observed by her mother. Mrs. Schumaker ordered him out of Zion City before she called the police.

"Come and Take Me Away."

Last Monday Knappen received a letter from Miss Schumaker, in which she told him of ill treatment at the hands of her father. He had learned of Knappen's visit to Zion City and was angered.

"Please come and take me away from here," the girl wrote. "Bring Victor with you. I will expect you Wednesday night. We will manage some way to get out of Zion City. Till then good-by. I love you. GRACE."

Knappen showed the letter to Victor and asked his aid. At 9 o'clock Wednesday night while services were in progress at the tabernacle, Victor and Knappen stealthily entered Zion City.

Signals His Sister.

The boys crept up to the rear of the hotel where they knew the girl would be waiting. Victor whistled and his sister answered by raising the window. The screen was lifted out and the girl climbed on the window sill. She slid down into the arms of her brother and sweetheart.

Cautiously the trio left Zion City and boarded a street car for Waukegan. Victor, who was married a few days before, had installed his wife in a furnished room at Waukegan and it was to his home that Grace was taken.

Knappen had been given a thirty-six hour leave of absence. Thursday morning he procured the marriage license at Waukegan and in the afternoon came to Chicago, accompanied by Grace and Victor and his wife. They went to the residence of the Rev. Louis Kohlman, pastor of the German Evangelical Friends church, 5206 Justine street, and were married.

Phones to Father.

Yesterday afternoon Knappen met his bride at the home of a married brother of hers, who resides at Fifty-first street and Forrestville avenue. He telephoned to the Zion tabernacle in Michigan avenue, where he knew Pastor Schumaker was, to tell him he was going to "call and explain things."

After a half hour's wait the janitor appeared with the pastor. They both rushed the young jackie and tried to imprison him in an ante-room, according to Knappen's story. The sailor let fly with his right and a blow on the chin dropped the pastor to his knees. The janitor also went to the floor.

Detectives from the bureau were rushed in an automobile to the tabernacle in response to the pastor's telephone call. Knappen was taken to headquarters and is detained.

Pastor Schumaker swore out a warrant for Knappen's arrest at Waukegan on a charge of abduction.

At 11 o'clock last night the couple were taken back to Waukegan, the girl being charged with disorderly conduct and the youthful bridegroom with abduction.

Knappen is the son of Rutledge Knappen, assistant grain weighmaster of Minneapolis.

FRENCH HONOR AMERICAN MEN OF FIRST FIGHT

Names of Fifteen Are Inscribed on Roll of Heroes.

AMERICAN FIELD HEADQUARTERS France, Nov. 17.—The names of fifteen American heroes were inscribed on the roll of fame by a French general today—the first regular American army soldiers fighting on French soil to achieve this honor.

Among the names were those of three American soldiers who were the first to give up their lives in action in France—Privates Gresham, Hay, and Enright.

The other twelve were American soldiers who recently repulsed a German raid.

"Despite a rain of eight to ten thousand enemy shells," the citation reads, "the Americans resisted with grenades rifles [illegible] merically superior enemy to retire."

The names inscribed on the roll of honor besides those of Gresham, Hay, and Enright, were:

Second Lieut. V. M. McLaughlin.
Second Lieut. R. O. Patterson.
Second Lieut. E. F. Erickson.
Sergt. John Farrowood.
Corporals Dave Knowles and Homer Givens.
Privates Charles Massa, W. M. Thomas, George Hurd, Boyd Wade, Robert W. Minken, and John Jarvis

Citation in French official reports customarily carries with it award of the Croix de Guerre. It was not made known today whether this same course will be adopted as to the American heroes.

Desultory artillerying was continuing all along the American front today but there were [illegible] actions.

Gov. Philipp of Wisconsin in Milwaukee Hospital

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 17.—Gov. Philipp, who was taken to a local hospital today suffering from acute pains in his side, was reported as greatly improved tonight and it is believed he can be removed to his home tomorrow. Gov. Philipp of late has devoted his entire time to matters pertaining to the war and he has steadfastly refused to listen to advice of friends that he take a rest.

ARMY CONTROL OF AUXILIARIES MADE COMPLETE

AMERICAN TRAINING CAMP IN FRANCE, Nov. 17.—All volunteers in the camion sections of the American field service who have not enlisted in the transport service of the American army are returning to Paris preparatory to sailing for America or to join other branches of the army and the navy service.

The majority of the camion personnel enlisted in the army and the return of the volunteers, many of whom are not eligible for the American army for various reasons, marks the complete militarization of all the ambulance and transport section in field service which has been connected with the French army since soon after the outbreak of the war.

Ambulance sections three and ten, which for the last year had served in the Balkans and since been recalled to France, were cited on their departure by Gen. Regnault, commanding the French army of the Orient. Each citation says:

"Thanks to the qualities of endurance, bravery, and coolness displayed by the personnel of this section in the most perilous circumstances, numerous French soldiers, often grievously wounded, have been able to receive expeditiously the necessary care which has saved their lives."

FORD SAYS WAR WILL BE DECIDED BY MACHINERY

Ready to Turn Over His Plant for Use of Nation.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—Machinery will win the war, Henry Ford declared in a statement made public tonight.

Mr. Ford, who has become connected with the shipping board, asserted that "the nation that knows best how to use tools and machinery will win."

Predicting that this would be the last war Mr. Ford urged that the government should preserve its great cantonments when peace comes for training men in industrial pursuits.

Plant at United States Service.

"The factories and personal organization of the Ford Motor company are at the disposal of the United States government and its allies," said Ford. "The production of automobiles for pleasure must be reduced.

"The idle cars standing along the street show that enough cars have been built to last for a while.

"Transportation for armies and supplies is a basic need of war time. Railroads alone cannot handle the freight. The Germans are reported to have moved recently an army of 800,000 men from the eastern to the western front by auto trucks.

"The Ford plant can produce 2,000 one-ton trucks daily and its production can be increased in a few weeks to 3,000. Each truck can haul eight soldiers with full equipment. During the first month our shops could furnish trucks to haul an army of 480,000, thereafter for 720,000 men in each month.

"We are ready to furnish the government these trucks at shop cost without profit. I will take no profit for anything produced for any government during the war. I despise the profiteer who makes money out of war.

"The tractor for plowing needs immediate attention. We can save ships by sending tractors to plow the land in Europe to grow crops there.

Must Keep Up Barracks.

"Our government must never abandon the barracks and army camps that are being built. When peace comes the world will be ready for disarmament. The people will understand the wrong of killing each other. The German will see that the American and Frenchman he went to kill is just as good as he is and the American will feel the same way about the German. Then we must develop a great national army for training our young men between the ages of 18 and 21.

"We can bring them together from farms and cities in the winter to the barracks and training places. Young Americans need discipline. In this service army and government can teach them order and train them to work. They should have a few hours of gymnasium and drill and five or six hours work in a factory every day."

"I have been disappointed during this visit to Washington to find our government planning different sizes and different kinds of equipment and machinery where one model could be used. Ships can be built faster, better and cheaper if standardized to a single model."

NINETEEN DIED AFTER SINKING OF ROCHESTER

Sims Reports Further Losses When Ship Is Destroyed.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—Twelve men, including five members of the naval armed guard, who left in the second officer's boat when the American steamer Rochester was torpedoed in the war zone Nov. 2, have been given up for lost by the navy department.

Vice Admiral Sims cabled today that no trace of the boat had been found. He also advised the department that Ernest H. Gragg, seaman, a member of the guard, and three members of the Rochester's crew died from exposure in another boat.

Two Killed by Explosion.

One member of the crew was lost overboard, making the total casualties nineteen, including Second Engineer Sondau and an oiler named Anderson, previously reported killed by the explosion of the torpedo.

Gragg's body was landed in Ireland and was buried there. He enlisted at Houston, Tex., Feb. 20, this year, and his mother, Mrs. Cora Gragg, lives at 515 Gregg street, Corpus Christi, Tex.

Seven Navy Men Saved.

Five of the naval guard were in a boat picked up by a British patrol, and in all seven of the navy men are known to have been saved. They are:

William Frederick Eisenhardt, seaman [father], John Edward Eisenhardt, 2314 Gravier street, New Orleans, La.

Thaddeus Hyatt Fellows, seaman [father], Harry E. Fellows, 1232 Clay avenue, New York, N. Y.

Joseph Powell Hoff, seaman [mother], Carrie W. Hoff, Doyle, La.

Edward Norton McCausland, chief boatswain's mate [father], Harry McCausland, St. John's, New Brunswick, Can.

Stephen Joseph Stavish, coxswain [uncle], John Gransky, 30 Van Kasen avenue, Bound Brook, N. J.

Warren Brown Thompson, seaman [mother], Julia Thompson, Imlaystown, N. J.

KILLED WOMAN; AMERICAN SHOT BY FIRING SQUAD

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—An American soldier, found guilty by court martial of criminal assault on and murder of a French woman, has been executed by a firing squad.

All details of this, the first death penalty imposed since the troops landed in Europe, are being withheld by the war department.

ALL WAR MOVES ARE DESCRIBED IN STATEMENTS

Reports by Capitals Give Results of the Contests.

FRENCH FRONT

FRENCH.

PARIS, Nov. 17.—There were active artillery engagements last night north of Courtecon. We repulsed an enemy detachment which attempted to approach our lines in this region and inflicted serious losses on it. Raids on German trenches southeast of St. Quentin, in the Champagne east of Teton, and in the Woevre, enabled us to bring back prisoners, including one officer, and war materials. In upper Alsace the artillery fighting was rather heavy at Schonholz. Elsewhere the night passed in quiet.

BRITISH.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—A successful operation was carried out late yesterday evening by detachments from the Highland, Berkshire, and Lancashire battalions in the vicinity of Passchendaele. Further portions of the enemy's defenses on the main ridge north of the village, including a strongly fortified farm, were captured by us. We also took a number of prisoners.

West of this locality also we have advanced our lines slightly at certain points. The enemy's artillery has again been active throughout the night, on the battle front. The German shelling has been particularly severe in the Passchendaele sector.

During the day the ground captured by us has been consolidated. The hostile artillery has again shown considerable activity east and northeast of Ypres.

Highland troops carried out a successful raid this morning south of the Scarpe river.

GERMAN.

BERLIN, via London, Nov. 17.—Western theater: Front of Crown Prince Rupprecht—In Flanders, near Dixmude and between the railways leading from Ypres, Staden and Roulers, the firing activity revived during the afternoon. By a vigorous thrust our storming troops brought back one officer and sixty-three men from the Belgian crater lines, south of Blankaert lake.

At St. Quentin, on the southern front, yesterday strong artillery and mine throwing fire again continued.

Front of the German crown prince—There were successful forefield engagements in the Ailette region, northwest of Auberive and on the eastern bank of the Meuse. French prisoners fell into our hands.

ITALIAN FRONT

ITALIAN.

ROME, Nov. 17.—From the Asiago plateau to the sea the enemy, without considering his losses, renewed his attacks on our mountain positions and his attempts on the plain to force the line of the Piave. Our troops with great stubbornness offered an effective defense, opposing the enemy numerically stronger and counter attacking him with admirable elan.

Yesterday fighting occurred from Monte Flor to Monte Castelgemberto at the defensive line of San Marino, at Monte Prassolan, and to the north of Quero, along the line Rosca-Cisa-Monte Cornelle-Piave valley.

On the plain between Salettuol and San Andrea di Barbarlano (on the lower Piave just above Zenson, at which the Germans effected their first crossing) the enemy at dawn, under protection of the most violent artillery fire, forced a passage of the river. His troops crossed to the right bank at Folina and Fagare. The troops at the former place were destroyed by our artillery and by a sudden attack of the Lecos brigade. The survivors, more than 300 men with ten officers, were made prisoner.

Retreat Is Cut Off.

The troops, by far the greater number, which had crossed at the latter place were heavily attacked by the Fifty-fourth division, whose troops, the Novara brigade and Third Bersaglieri, excelled in courage. At the end of the day many enemy dead remained on the ground. About 600 men and twenty officers were brought back prisoner and the remainder, driven up to the embankment of the river, were shelled by our artillery, which hindered the return of these troops to the other bank.

At the Zenson loop the enemy is being closed up in a zone more and more restricted.

On the lower reaches of the Piave the royal army, with aircraft, floating and ground batteries and light forces, is contributing effectively to the defense.

AVIATION.

Favored by atmospheric conditions our airmen during the day profitably carried out work against massed bodies of enemy troops.

GERMAN.

BERLIN, Nov. 17.—In spite of the cold and snow, Austro-Hungarian troops, indefatigable in attack, climbed the steep summit of Monte Prassolan, between the Brenta and the Piave rivers, which was defended stubbornly by the Italians. A regimental commander, fifty other officers, and 750 men were captured.

There have been reconnoitering engagements along the west bank of the lower Piave.

PALESTINE FRONT.

BRITISH.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—Gen. Allenby reports that yesterday there were minor advances in certain sectors of our front. Our yeomanry, who on Thursday took Abu Schushe ridge, five miles southeast of Er Ramie, captured 360 prisoners and one gun. They carried the Turkish position at a gallop, and 431 Turks were counted on the ground.

The Australians, in taking El Tine, captured large numbers of prisoners, one gun, three airplanes, and considerable quantities of ammunition and stores. On Thursday one hostile airplane was brought down.

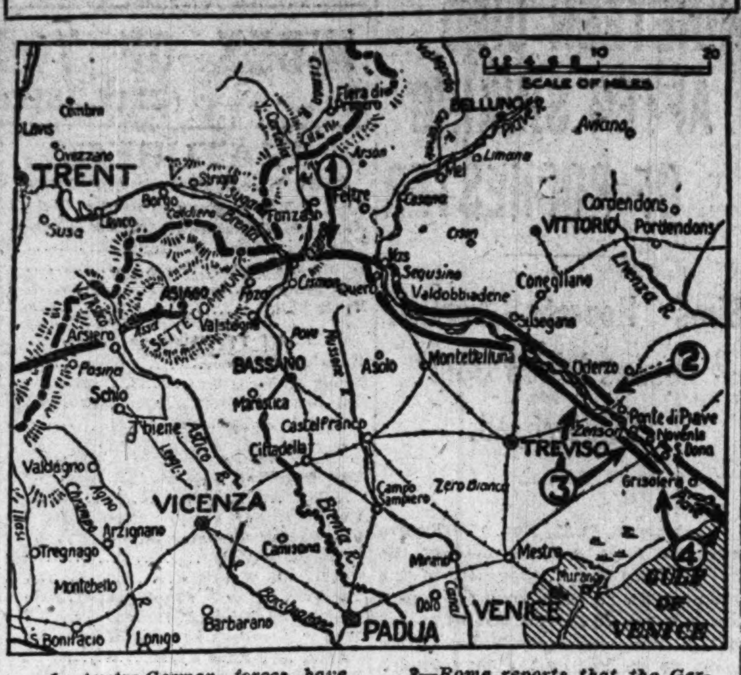
The Turks are reported to be endeavoring to prepare an intrenched position north of Jaffa, roughly parallel to the river Aujer (Nahr El Aujer).

MACEDONIAN FRONT

GERMAN.

BERLIN, Nov. 17.—The situation in Macedonia is unchanged.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT



1—Austro-German forces have captured Monte Prassolau, between the Brenta and Piave rivers.

2—Germans cross the Piave at Fagare above Zenson, where they were driven back to the embankment.

3—Rome reports that the German forces which crossed the Piave river near Zenson are being driven back, 1,000 prisoners being taken here.

4—Italian naval forces shellling the Austro-German positions on the lower Piave.

FRANCE DRAINING HER RESOURCES

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—The drain in the resources of France since the war began is shown in figures made public today by the food administration.

Using the production of 1913 as a basis, the 1917 wheat crop of France is short 53.3 per cent, or 176,000,000 bushels; the potato crop is short 165,000,000 bushels, the sugar beet crop is short 148,000,000 bushels, and the number of cattle has declined 2,435,000 head. The number of hogs has been lessened by 2,825,000 head, while sheep show a falling off of 5,535,000 head.

Measures adopted in France for the conservation of wheat flour consist in the use of bread made of 80 per cent wheat flour with an admixture of other cereals, such as rice, barley, oats, rye, maize, beans and ground nuts. Rice flour is the most practicable of these admixtures. It is being obtained from the French colonies of Indo-China, Tunis and Algeria, where there is an exportable surplus.

WOMAN ASKS $50,000 DAMAGES.

Miss Irene Johnson yesterday filed a personal injury suit for $50,000 against the Fair. She charged that she was struck by a truck owned by the Fair company.

PRESIDENT MAY PICK SUPREME U. S. WAR BOARD

Action Urged to Obtain Teamwork and Halt Confusion.

with orders for private shops for the next year or two.

The subcommittee of the National Council of Defense, in charge of the priority of contracts, has relieved the situation slightly by arranging for the transfer of some of these orders to the government.

It is also true that private firms having contracts with the government for millions of dollars worth of ordnance are faced with a similar shortage of suitable machine tools. They are not able to equip their plants or to replace old and worn out lathes and slotters. They may be compelled to cancel or revoke their government orders from sheer inability to fill them.

Only the other day an American firm asked permission from the war trade board to export a heavy duty lathe. They were told that no such permits would be issued for the next year, at least, and that if the government could learn the source from which they obtained such machinery it would promptly be commandeered. The firm which asked for the export permit promptly turned the lathe over to the government.

How many similar pieces of heavy machinery are still available in various parts of the United States?

Are all the big lathes, slotters, and planes in the United States now being used to the best advantage of the government?

Docks Are Congested.

Suppose that an unexpected supply of such machinery should be discovered somewhere by a scout for the shipping board, which conceivably could use a lot of the machines, who would decide whether the claims of the war department should take precedence over those of the shipping board?

At present they are both responsible to and under the authority of only the president.

I am told that docks from which shipments of supplies for the armies in France are made are congested with goods. These goods are hauled to the seaboard by the railroads.

The shipping board is responsible for finding the ships to carry them across the ocean. The actual loading into the ships is done or supervised by the army. All three are independent bodies. Yet the work of taking them from the factory to the base in France is or should be one continuous process of transportation.

What authority is there now to provide for and compel close articulation and team work among the three present factors in the process?

I have talked today with several men prominent in war work who have read THE TRIBUNE's first article on the present situation in Washington. Without an exception they agree that the present slow and bungling progress in almost every war activity threatens national humiliation and disaster.

They believe that the creation of a supreme war board in some form, which shall be responsible only to President Wilson and which shall have power to render decisions between departments and war commissions, is the first and most important step towards welding all the energies of the nation into an irresistible war machine.

SHRAPNEL

Two hundred sailors were given a party yesterday by Mrs. Ford Rodman Carter, who invited them to skate and dance with Chicago society girls at the Arena. They acted as if they were having the best time in the world. Mrs. William A. Moffett, wife of the commandant at the station, the guest of honor, who mothers the hundreds of boys who are taking naval training, came with this part of her flock. Assisting Mrs. Carter were Mrs. Charles C. Adsit, Mrs. Frank Hibbard, Mrs. Harry L. Taft, and Mrs. Sydney Gardner. Miss Margaret Pullman and Miss Helen Hoyne, debutantes of last year, were there; Mrs. Loring W. Coleman, the young bride, was there with her husband, and others were Miss Rosamond Goodrich, Miss Elizabeth Adsit, Miss Dorothy Dean, Miss Marion Beach, Miss Elizabeth Beach, Miss Helen Wellman, Miss Helen Johnson, Miss Catharine Lawson, and Miss Elizabeth Flinty.

The woman's auxiliaries of the Red Cross offer an opportunity for women to do their bit in war relief work. Women desiring to do this are asked to call at room 1402 Stevens building.

A final opportunity to enlist in the One Hundred and Eighth United States engineers is open to Chicagoans. Col. Allen, commanding the unit which is now at Camp Logan, wired yesterday that there are now between thirty and forty vacancies. No enlistments will be received after Nov. 20.

Plans for active operations in Red Cross and other war work were discussed and outlined at a luncheon of Kappa Beta Gamma sorority in the Hotel La Salle yesterday. It is proposed to form a Red Cross auxiliary of the Drama league.

Swiss Police Use Swords to Break Peace Meeting

ZURICH, Switzerland, Nov. 17.—The police were obliged to use their sabers to break up a pacifist manifestation here last evening. Several persons were wounded. Numerous arrests were made.

CLEMENCEAU MUST MAKE GOOD QUICK, IS DEMAND

PARIS, Nov. 17.—The Clemenceau ministry on the whole is received favorably by the press, but the editors are all careful to make it clear that much is expected of the new premier and that failure to produce results will meet with little indulgence. M. Clemenceau is welcomed because it is believed he will deal out exemplary justice to enemies at home without consideration as to who is affected, and also will inject new vigor into the conduct of the war.

"These considerations, in which instinct has as much of a part as reason, have irresistibly borne M. Clemenceau to power," the Figaro says. "We do not ask for speeches or fine shading of thought but for propulsive action and real justice."

This quotation fairly represents the comment of all the newspapers in Paris and the provinces with the exception of the Socialist organs, which are merciless in their criticism of the premier. Pierre Renaudel, editor of Humanite, asks whether M. Clemenceau will live up to "all we know of him."

"That is the question and the stake is the salvation of the country," he continues. "Events will show whether it was right to call M. Clemenceau to power or whether it would have been right to try to keep him out."

Marcel Sembat, in the Lanterne, is even more severe.

"He will not last, because France must triumph and M. Clemenceau possesses exactly the qualities to prevent a triumph," M. Sembat writes.

Twenty Nonsinkable Ships to Be Built in America

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—The shipping board has approved the building of twenty 4,000 ton nonsinkable ships by the French government in the United States. By so doing it has waived the rule that no foreign construction should be permitted at this time.

The nonsinkable ship, developed by French experts, is said to have withstood torpedo attack in a test in which four shots were fired into the hull and the only effect was to destroy the cargo immediately surrounding the point of attack.

Have You Anything To Sell?

I Am a Merchandiser of 30 Years National Reputation, I Can Sell Your Products to Best Dealers in Every City in U. S. and Canada

My proposition sounds like a fairy tale to most hard headed business men who know the difficulties of selling the trade—know what salesmen's commissions amount to and what their traveling expenses cost. But as my claims can be investigated and proved by actual orders, there is not a particle of magic in my methods.

In the past 30 years I have put on the market through my organization some of the most successful products familiar to almost every man, woman and child in the U. S. and Canada. I have made millionaires of small beginners.

In the 280 cities of the U. S. of over 20,000 population, I have more than 7,000 Grocers, Dry Goods Dealers, House Furnishing Goods Dealers, Druggists and Hardware Stores to whom I can sell in their line an initial order of any class of goods that I will personally vouch for. It merely takes my word that I am back of the goods and will see them through. And then—if your goods won't quickly be selling in all the other good stores and in all the smaller adjoining cities, it is the fault of your goods or of you. My rating in Dun or Bradstreet is all the assurance any man needs dealing with me.

But I must know a good deal about you. Your goods must be right. You must be ready to back them up. You must advertise them.

IF YOU HAVEN'T THE CAPITAL TO DO THIS, PERHAPS I CAN HELP YOU IF THE GOODS SATISFY ME.

Write me at once. State fully what you have, send samples and literature and tell frankly just how you are situated financially, what your production facilities are and other information peculiar to your goods.

I am not a mere wholesaler, nor a jobber, neither am I a broker.

You will not receive any catalogues nor any request for retainer fee. If I decide to take hold of your product, it will be because I am sure I can make it successful. I do not wish personal interviews, as it will be a waste of time until I can look your proposition over. After doing so, I will advise you fully and ask for date to meet you. Hence you must at first address me Merchandiser, care of Charles H. Fuller Company, 623 S. Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill.

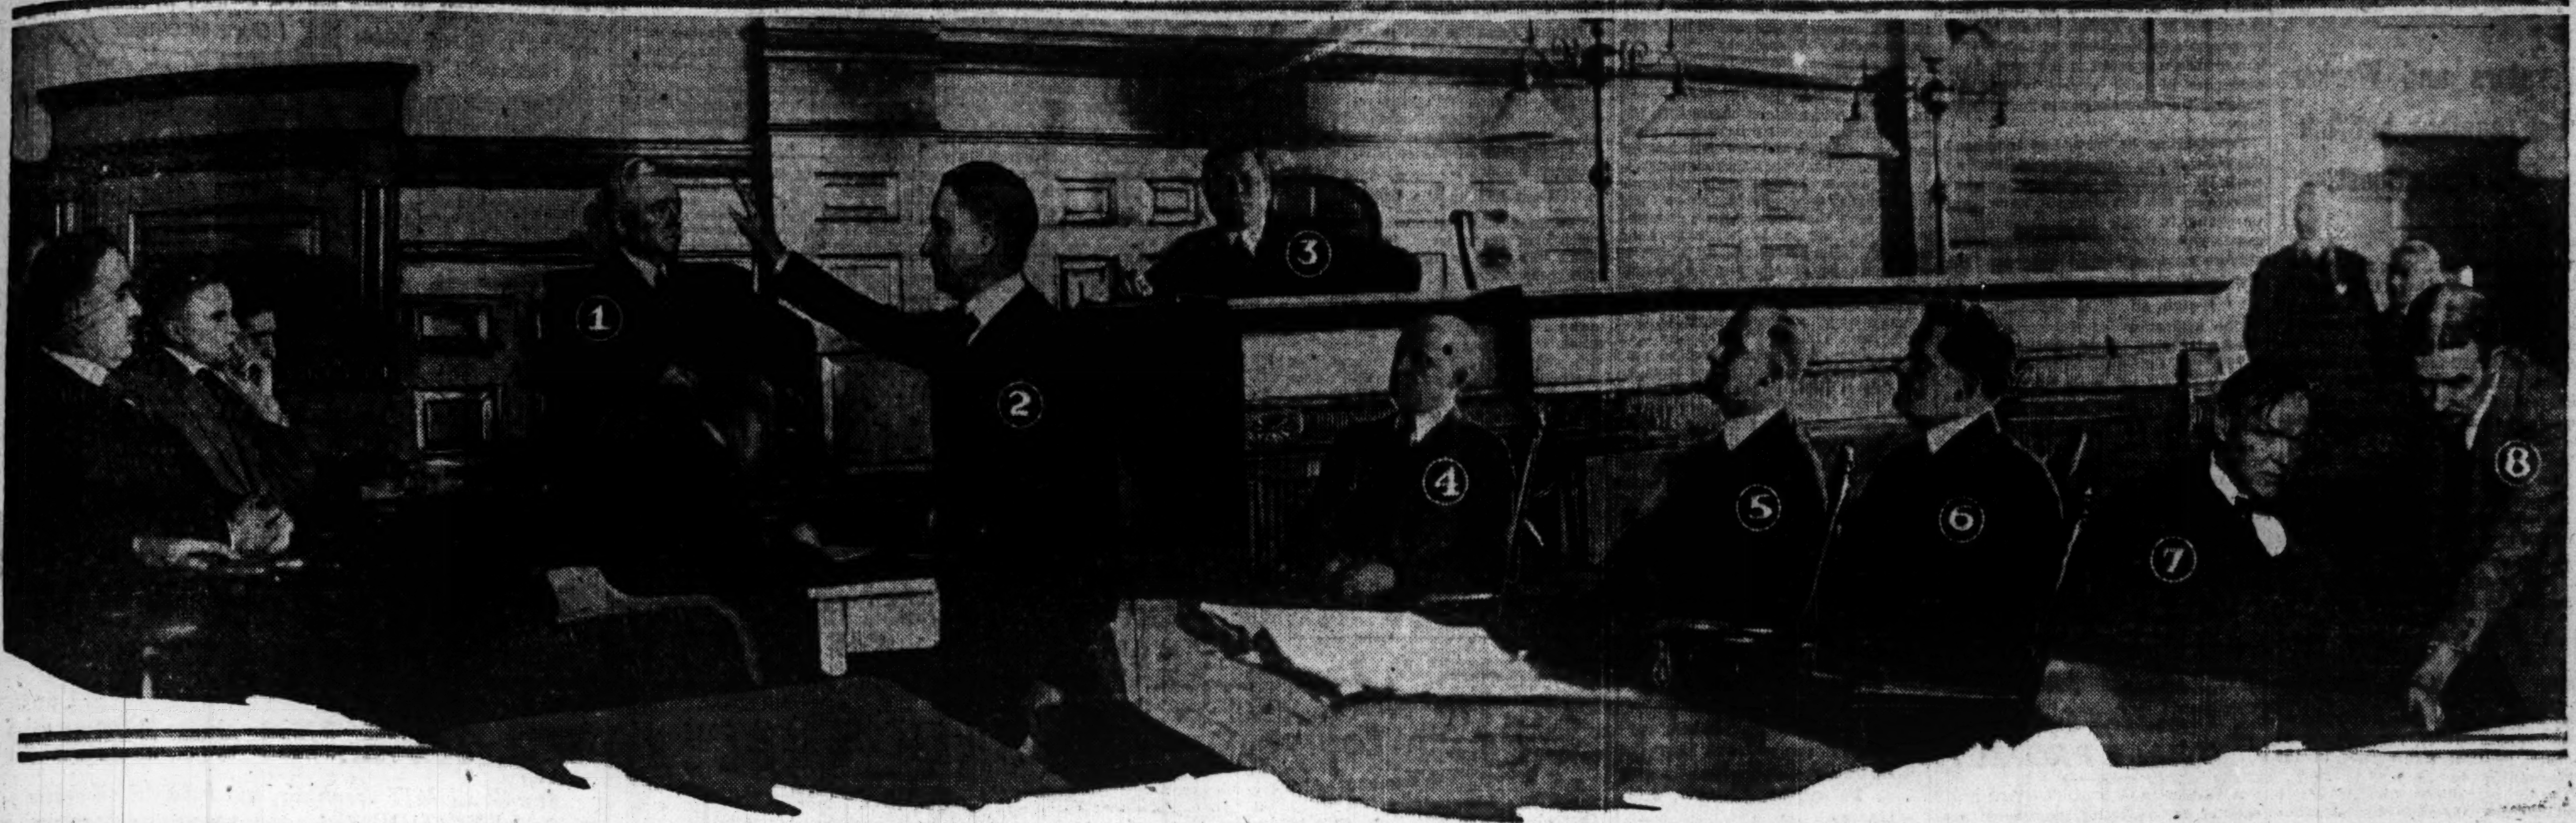
A BATTLE OF WITS WITH A REPUTATION THE STAKE

Lawyers for the State and Defense in the Trial of Former Chief of Police Charles C. Healey, William Skidmore and Detective Sergt. Stephen Barry, Charged With Accepting Graft, Are Shown as They Fought Over the Admission of Testimony. On the Witness Stand Is Former Inspector Nicholas Hunt, Who Is Unfolding the Story of the Trapping of the Alleged Grafters.



(1)—NICHOLAS HUNT; (2)—ASS'T. STATE'S ATTORNEY JOHNSTON; (3)—JUDGE SABATH; (4)—CHARLES' ERBSTEIN; (5)—Wm. SKIDMORE; (6)—STEPHEN BARRY; (7)—CLARENCE DARROW; (8)—JOHN J. HEALY.

REIGN OF VICE BARED BY HUNT IN HEALEY CASE

Former Detective Chief Retells Stories of Underworld Graft.

Nicholas Hunt, former chief of detectives and for years policeman, captain, and inspector, recited his official opinion of Chicago's sordid underworld yesterday in the trial of Charles C. Healey, former chief of the police, William Skidmore and "Steve" Barry, former detective sergeant, on graft charges.

Hunt, now head of a private detective agency, explained his acquaintanceship with the vice lords whose names have been notorious through all the chapters of the underworld's history in recent years. "Mike de Pike" Heitler, his brother "Dutch" Heitler, "Mother" Miller, "Teenan" Jones, the Negro gambler, Harry Brolaski, Ben Hyman, "Tom" Costello, "Mary the Gun," and a dozen others flitted before the jurors in the ardent discriptive of Hunt and the questions of Charles E. Erbstein, attorney for Skidmore and Barry, who conducted the examination.

Charge Against Hoyne Falls.

A charge that State's Attorney Hoyne had nodded to a member of the jury was disposed of when it was shown that Mr. Hoyne in fact spoke to some representatives of the press at the same time that the juror in question nodded to his wife who at that moment entered the courtroom.

Hunt was on the stand during the morning session, court adjourning at noon. He will be recalled tomorrow morning and the cross-examination by Attorney Erbstein continued. Erbstein first evinced an interest in Hunt's financial affairs by asking: "Where do you keep your bank account?" A.—The Hyde Park State bank and the Fort Dearborn bank.

Q.—Did you keep any account at the Washington Park bank? A.—No.

Q.—When did you first meet Thomas Costello? A.—About 1890.

Q.—Didn't you introduce Costello to Heitler? A.—No.

Q.—When were you in command of the Desplaines street station? A.—1910 and 1911.

Discharge a Mystery.

Q.—What were you discharged from the police department for? A.—That is a mystery to me yet.

Q.—Who was the mayor at that time? A.—Mayor Harrison, in 1912.

Q.—Don't you know as a matter of fact that these charges are a part of the council proceedings?

At this point Mr. Erbstein read a list of charges which alleged that the former inspector, who was then in command of the central division, was guilty of incompetency and neglect of duty. He was charged with allowing gambling in the loop and street soliciting.

"I did not read the charges. I knew what they were to be. I even did not answer them," replied Hunt.

Q.—Did you know that there were houses of prostitution in the Central division? A.—No, not personally.

Q.—At that time, who was chief of police? A.—John McWeeney.

Q.—Was he a friend of yours? A.—I can't say that he was.

Q.—Did you ever have any trouble with McWeeney? A.—I can't say that he was friendly during that proceeding. I can say I think I was "jobbed" at that time, and that other captains were "jobbed," too.

Q.—Do you know Mother Miller, who had a hotel near the detective bureau? A.—No.

Harrison's Remark Barred.

Q.—Didn't the mayor say he wanted to make your discharge "hogtied," so you could never get back on the police department?

Prosecutor Johnston strenuously objected and was sustained.

Q.—Were you on the police department under Mayor Dunne? A.—Yes, for a year or so.

Q.—Were you discharged? A.—No, I was retired over my objections.

Q.—Did you know a man named Teenan Jones? A.—Yes.

Q.—How long? A.—About twenty-five years.

Q.—What was his business? A.—A saloonkeeper.

Q.—Did he keep a "crap" game? A.—I heard from my officers he cheated once in a while.

Denies Taking Graft.

Q.—Did you get anything for letting him cheat? A.—No, emphatically no.

Q.—Do you know Harry Brolaski? A.—Yes, for about seven years.

Q.—Do you know Ben Hyman? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did Brolaski come to your office with gambling evidence? A.—No, he came with evidence on a murder case and you know it.

Q.—Was Ben Hyman ever in your office while you were chief of detectives? A.—I don't know; maybe.

Q.—When did you last see Ben Hyman? A.—Last week when he went into an office in the building where my office is located.

Burr Oak Election Issue.

Q.—Do you know where the village of Burr Oak is located? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you see "Mike de Pike" on the last election day in Burr Oak? A.—I don't think so.

Q.—Did you detail three men for Heitler at Burr Oak? A.—No, but I had three men there for the state's attorney.

Q.—Do you know of Heitler's gambling places at 28 North Halsted street and 1807 West Madison street? A.—Just lately.

Q.—Did you have a conversation in October, 1916, with Heitler in your office regarding giving "Jack" Dempsey, an ex-policeman, a job as doorman at one of those places? A.—I certainly did not.

Q.—How much money did "Mike de Pike" owe you? A.—None.

Q.—Doesn't he owe you $250 now? A.—No.

Q.—Didn't he come to your office every week and pay you money? A.—No.

Q.—Does Costello owe you money? A.—No.

Q.—Do you know a man named Alexander? A.—No.

Q.—Don't you know about a financial transaction between Heitler, Costello, and Alexander? A.—No; all I know is that they were in a race track in Indiana.

Policed Porter (Ind.) Track.

Q.—Didn't you have a financial transaction with Heitler and Costello regarding the race track at Porter, Ind.? A.—No; but Mr. Knotts, head of a race track there, hired my agency to watch the fences.

Q.—How many men did you send? A.—About four or five.

Q.—Are you sure it was Knotts? A.—Now, if you will let me give an explanation I will tell you. Ben Hyman came to me and said he was instructed by Mr. Knotts to protect the property and to spot for handbooks.

The attorney and the witness engaged many times in verbal tilts and numerous times the witness was asked other questions before he was able to answer the previous question.

Q.—Did you know Hyman was a gambler while you were chief of detectives? A.—Yes, I heard it.

Q.—Did you arrest him? A.—No.

Q.—Why didn't you? A.—Because I don't know that he gambled in Chicago.

Q.—Did Hyman ever come to your office when you were chief of detectives? A.—Yes.

Q.—What did he want? A.—I don't know.

Q.—Did he come to say "good-morning"? A.—Maybe he said that. He came about a murder that was on trial in this building.

Sent by McWeeny.

Q.—Didn't you tell us before that Brolaski came to your office about another case and that Hyman did not? A.—I want to explain, both of them came about a murder case and they were sent by Chief McWeeny.

Q.—Do you know Mary Ann The Gun? A.—No.

Q.—Do you know Butch Carroll? A.—Yes, he is a saloonkeeper.

Q.—Do you know Dutch Heitler, Mike's brother? A.—Yes.

Q.—Didn't Brolaski sue you? A.—Yes, for slander.

Q.—And you settled, didn't you? A.—My lawyer did. I want to explain.

The court—All right, go ahead.

"I was sued for slander because the papers printed an item about him which I gave them. The witnesses were in St. Louis. My lawyer went to St. Louis and I got the records to prove what I said about Brolaski. He said he would settle for $150 and I told my lawyer to settle, rather than have the expense of bringing the witnesses from St. Louis."

Names Former Ald. Buck.

Q.—Do you know Ald. Buck? A.—Yes; about ten years.

Q.—Are you friends? A.—I don't know. We talk when we meet.

Q.—Don't you knew he offered a resolution in the city council against your appointment as chief of detectives? A.—No.

Q.—Don't you know that Costello and Heitler made an affidavit to Percy Coffin with reference to the vice district of which you were inspector? A.—No.

Q.—Didn't you get the affidavit? A.—No.

Q.—Didn't Coffin talk to you about Heitler? A.—He asked me if I knew Heitler, and asked me to send Heitler to him.

Q.—Did you see Buck regarding the removal of the vice district? A.—I don't remember. I removed the vice district on orders of Leroy Steward.

Q.—Where did you move them? A.—I closed them up.

Q.—Did you see Heitler at that time? A.—I guess I saw him.

Q.—What was his business? A.—I think he ran nine houses of prostitution.

Q.—How do you know? A.—Because I closed them up."

Didn't Arrest Heitler.

Q.—What did "Mike de Pike" want visiting you? A.—Because some of his constituents, his women, were in court nearly every day.

Q.—When he told you that, did you arrest him? A.—Why should I?

"Because he told you he was a resort owner," the attorney replied.

Prosecutor Johnston objected, and the remark was stricken from the records.

Q.—Do you know of the Normandie hotel, 419 South Wabash avenue? A.—I know of it.

Q.—Didn't you loan Heitler and Costello $1,000 to open a hotel in Kensington? A.—No.

Q.—Didn't you know of a raid in a hotel in Kensington? A.—I think I heard of it.

Q.—Isn't it a fact that you interceded for Ben Hyman? A.—No; I was not on the police department then.

Q.—Why did you go to Barry's house? A.—To help him out and to tell him what the lieutenant said.

Court then adjourned until Monday morning.

Heitler Still in Kansas.

Leavenworth, Kas., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—A representative of the state's attorney in Chicago visited the federal penitentiary here today and spent an hour and a half in conference with "Mike the Pike" Heitler, but he did not take Heitler away with him.

Heitler did not make any written statement. It is thought here that Heitler will be ordered turned over to the Chicago officials soon, but no request to this effect has been made to the prisons officials yet.

LEAPS IN FRONT OF LOCOMOTIVE; CHANCE FOR LIFE

A spectacular attempt at suicide was made yesterday at Barnard Crossing of the Chicago and Northwestern railway. Oscar Nelson, an employé of Mrs. Emily Riech, formerly mistress of the notorious "Arena" in Michigan avenue and the Crescent "Country club" at Glen Ellyn, walked toward an approaching engine, poised as for a dive, and then threw himself under the pilot.

A number of persons saw the man jump. The pilot of the engine struck Nelson on the head and threw him to the side of the track, his head badly cut. Trainmen placed the injured man on a mattress procured in the caboose, placed the mattress athwart the engine pilot, and proceeded to Glen Ellyn for first aid.

It is said Nelson will recover. He is believed to have been temporarily demented.

GIRL'S PARENTAL SCHOOL URGED BY JUDGE ARNOLD

A parental school for girls was urged yesterday by Judge Victor P. Arnold, speaking before the Illinois State Teachers' association at the Congress hotel. For a number of years there has been such an institution in Chicago for boys, he said, and there should be one for girls.

"The girl leaves school to go to the movies," he said. "She gets out on the street and away from the influence of her home and then she has only one step further to go and she is a delinquent."

Following a talk on "The Girl and the Law," by Miss Mary M. Bartelme of the Juvenile court, the association elected officers for the year. They are: Miss Florence Holbrook, president; Miss Ida L. M. Fursman, vice president; Amanda Geitler, secretary; Albert W. Evans, treasurer; Miss Amelia Prendergast, chairman of the executive committee.

Discharged Soldier, Called by 'Secret Agent,' Vanishes

Joseph P. Howard, 21 years old, volunteered last spring and was in the army on registration day, June 5. Early in August he was discharged for physical disability. Friday night he was taken from his home by a man who represented himself as a secret service agent. That night he telephoned his father, who lives at 46 North Mayfield avenue, that he would not be home until the next day. All day yesterday the father sought him. The young man could not be found at any of the offices in the federal building. Government officials are investigating.

AGREE TO RAISE COAL MINE WAGE IF PUBLIC PAYS

Operators and Workers Get Together, but Ask Fuel Price Boost.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—Anthracite operators and miners today agreed on wage increases of approximately 20 per cent, conditioned on an increase in prices of coal at the mine to cover the raise, and submitted their agreement to Fuel Administrator Garfield. The operators say they will not grant the increases unless the government raises the price.

The conditional increases would give to the anthracite workers $40,000,000 more pay than they received last year. Day men would get increases ranging from 15 to 44 per cent and contract men 15 per cent.

Change Convention Date.

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 17.—After holding conventions for thirty-five years in November, the American Federation of Labor voted, 255 to 21, to meet hereafter in June. This was decided upon at today's session of the thirty-seventh annual convention after a lengthy debate, during which remarks as to possible political significance in the move were made.

The talk of politics prompted President Samuel Gompers to state emphatically that the federation's policy of nonparticipation in partisan politics had not, and would not, be changed by the adoption of the resolution.

"We will continue to fight for our friends and try to defeat our enemies, no matter what their politics or creed," he said.

The change in the time of meeting was made after the committee on laws brought in a report recommending the adoption of a resolution by John B. Lennon so to amend the constitution.

Raise New York Port Pay.

New York, Nov. 17.—Increased wage schedules, granting in a large measure the demands of 7,000 marine workers in the port of New York, were announced here today by the government board of arbitration appointed to decide the issue between them and their employers.

War Savings Stamps to Have Nation-Wide Sale

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—Plans for placing war savings stamps on sale in at least a million establishments for the campaign opening Dec. 3 were made today by treasury officials and the war savings committee. Schools and groceries, cigar stands and other retail stores will not be required to buy the stamps, but may obtain them on consignment for sale. This scheme is expected to result in the participation in the savings movement of many thousands of small dealers who otherwise could not afford adequate investment to keep a supply of the stamps on hand.

Excessive War Profits of Their Employers Cause of Unrest Among Many U. S. Workers

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—War profiteering by the great industries of the nation is held chiefly responsible by Secretary of Labor Wilson for the numerous strikes and other evidences of labor unrest which are causing the administration much anxiety.

Profiteering, he says, has increased the cost of the necessities of life and made it necessary to raise wages. Moreover, the workingmen have been unwilling to abide by pre-war agreements when they found that their employers were taking advantage of the war to roll up huge profits.

Watch on Steel Industry.

The utterances of the secretary of labor attracted unusual attention because labor troubles have begun in the steel industry, the huge war profits of which have become notorious. The government fixed the price of steel, claiming that a reduction in the prices had been effected. The prices were fixed on the basis of a report made by the trade commission of an inquiry into the cost of production in the principal steel plants.

This report was suppressed, despite frequent challenges to disclose it emanating from persons who assert that the difference between the production costs ascertained and the prices fixed by the government would disclose the enormous profits allowed to the manufacturers.

Chief Causes of Unrest.

In discussing the causes of labor unrest Secretary Wilson said:

"The greatest reason for the unrest on the part of the workers in the United States is that the story has gone forth that corporations engaged in the iron and steel industry have been making 200 and 300 and 400 per cent on their investment; that corporations engaged in the shipbuilding trade have been making enormous profits on their investment; that corporations engaged in mining and lumbering have been making enormous profits on their investments. In other words, the thought has been carried to the workers of the country that the business men of the country have not been patriotic, but have been taking advantage of their country's necessity for the purpose of profiteering, and they have insisted upon getting their share of the swag. My view is that there should not be any swag to share.

Works in a Circle.

"This thing works, and must work, in a circle. If you increase the cost of food, then you must increase the cost of wages. If you increase the cost of wages, then you must increase the cost of the product, the selling price of the product. If you increase the cost for the selling price of the product, then, again, you must increase the cost of the food supplies in order to enable the farmer to make good on the machinery that he has to buy, and again you have to raise wages, and again you have to raise the selling price of the product and again raise the food price, and so on in a circle.

"The only great value that comes from the fixing of prices is that it stabilizes things. It gives you not a wage fixed by virtue of some arbitrary law of the government but a wage fixed by virtue of the stability of the industry itself.

Demands on the Unions.

"So, in dealing with workmen in a number of instances I have said to them: 'This is no time for insisting upon recognition of your union. This is no time to insist upon changes of standards. If you have been unable to secure recognition during normal times, if you have been unable to induce or compel certain standards that you believe you ought to have, under normal times, then you should not take advantage of your country's necessities; you should not endanger the future liberty of our people by insisting upon these changes at this time.'

"But I also want to say to business men that this is no time for standing upon their prejudices. This is no time for insisting upon profiteering. If the business man were unable to secure normal profits in normal times, then he should not take advantage of his country's necessities to force abnormal profits at this time."

TEUTONS MAKE BIG POST WAR TRADE PROJECT

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 17.—Vast projects of far reaching importance are being discussed, according to the German papers, at a conference at Hamburg, of German, Austrian, and Hungarian economic associations. So important are they, says the Cologne Gazette, that in the national interest it is not desirable to disclose more than the bare outlines.

This newspaper vouchsafes the information that the discussions have turned on big schemes to procure raw materials after the war and defeat the entente's plans to isolate the central powers commercially. The organization is planned of an all embracing system of economics in the interest of the central powers, including the development of inland waterways from the Elbe to the Danube, probably with German control of the estuary of the Danube.

The rebirth of the Polish mercantile marine is the object of a league founded at Cracow under auspices of the foreign legion. The league has undertaken an active propaganda in Polish trade circles and the incorporation of a joint stock company to finance the new commercial fleet is contemplated.

WILL ASK U. S. TO STIR MUCK IN E. ST. LOUIS

East St. Louis, Ill., Nov. 17.—The United States department of justice will be asked to secure evidence on which to base prosecutions of officials of East St. Louis and St. Clair county, Chairman Johnson of the congressional riot investigating committee, said after the adjournment of the committee today.

Mr. Johnson also said he would inform President Wilson of conditions in East St. Louis to make certain there would be no temporizing with the situation. It is understood that Attorney General Brundage of Illinois will be in charge of any prosecutions which result.

"A number of prosecutions ought to follow," Mr. Johnson said. "There should be several for malfeasance in office, and there is enough evidence in the record of the hearing upon which to base several impeachments and disbarments."

AMERICAN AID TO REVIVE ITALY

ROME, Nov. 16.—[Delayed.]—"It is impossible to find words to express our admiration and sympathy for Italy at this moment," said Maj. Grayson M. P. Murphy, head of the American Red Cross commission to Europe, today. "Her battle is our battle for victory.

"It is the desire of our nation to serve in every way in our power. The American Red Cross is offering the assistance of the people of the United States. We are shipping medical and hospital supplies, foodstuffs, blankets, and clothing for refugees from our European warehouses and have cabled to our home organization to use all available shipping space from America to Italy for the transportation of foodstuffs.

"Initial emergency appropriations amounting to more than $750,000 have been authorized."

Deny Reports of Feasts for Interned Germans

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—Reports that the Germans interned in camp at Hot Springs, N. C., eat five meals a day and enjoy many extravagances of diet are denounced by the department of labor, which has them in charge.

Food Administrator Hoover has recommended that the prisoners be put on army or navy rations.

The labor department says the prisoners are receiving an ordinary wholesome diet in the interest of showing Germany that her prisoners here are well treated and with the hope of inducing her to treat American captives the same way.

CHICAGO motorists particularly appreciate the utility of the Nash Sedan.

For Chicago is subjected to every weather extreme—broiling hot summer, spring and fall rains and blustery winter days come in turn.

The Nash Sedan is a sensible, economical purchase, because it affords the protection and convenience of the enclosed car when the weather is bad, and it is quickly transformed into an open touring car for pleasant days.

Buying a Nash Sedan for your family is a sane and sensible thing to do. It will stimulate cheerfulness and help to lessen the stress of the times.

ASKS $50,000 HEART BALM OF MOTHER-IN-LAW

Widow Who Recently Inherited $500,000 Is Sued.

Mrs. Laura Fellheimer of Macomb, widow of Isaac Fellheimer, who was one of Macomb's wealthiest merchants was made defendent in a $50,000 alienation of affections suit filed in the Circuit court yesterday by her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Edna Fellheimer. The damages are asked for the lost love of Frank Fellheimer.

The praecipe was filed by Attorneys Ader & Ader and the story of the suit was told by Attorney Edward J. Ader.

Sets Aside the Judgment.

"At the time Frank Fellheimer and Edna White married both Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Fellheimer objected, but the newlyweds were happy. Two months afterward the bridegroom went back to his parents. The bride promptly secured a wife desertion warrant for his arrest. Young Frank jumped on a Denver train and Edna caught the next. All through the west the chase went on, but Frank was pretty clever. She never caught him.

"Two months ago Isaac Fellheimer died and left an estate of $500,000 to his wife.

Leaves $500,000 Estate.

"I then learned that Frank had stepped into a court in St. Paul and filed a bill asking that the wedding be annulled. He filed a few false affidavits stating that his father was dying and that he desired to see his son before he passed away. But, the affidavits asserted, the father didn't want to see his son unless the marriage to 'that girl' had been annulled.

"Within a week the marriage was annulled and Frank went home to his father. My brother, William F. Ader, went before the judge who entered the decree this morning and the court set aside the judgment.

"That is the story, all except that my client knows her little broken heart is worth $50,000."

FAILS FOR ARMY; TAKES HIS LIFE IN LOOP STORE

John J. Cowley, 22 years old, shot and killed himself yesterday afternoon on the fifth floor of Charles A. Stevens & Bros.' store at 19 North State street. He worked there as a clerk and lived with his mother at 3322 South Wood street.

His mother, Mrs. Mary Cowley, a widow, explained that he had been despondent because he could not enter the army.

"Both of my boys were summoned through the draft," she said. "Frank, who is 21, was accepted, and John, who was left as my only means of support, was exempted. It depressed him. He wanted to fight for his country."

Cowley used a revolver belonging to a night watchman, which was kept in a drawer of the desk at which his superior, R. L. Moore, sat. While Mr. Moore was absent the young man took the weapon, went into the lavatory, and shot himself in the left temple.

"Baby Jo" Buckle to Be Star in Court Battle

"Baby Jo" Buckle, 5 years old, will be the subject of a hotly contested habeas corpus case before Judge Thomson next week. The youngster is now in the New York Foundling hospital, where it was placed after being taken away from Mrs. Frances Buckle of 6607 Blackstone avenue by police officers on Nov. 7 on complaint of John Rouse, 5611 La Salle street, Chicago representative of the institution where Mrs. Buckle got the child. She is suing to recover the youngster.

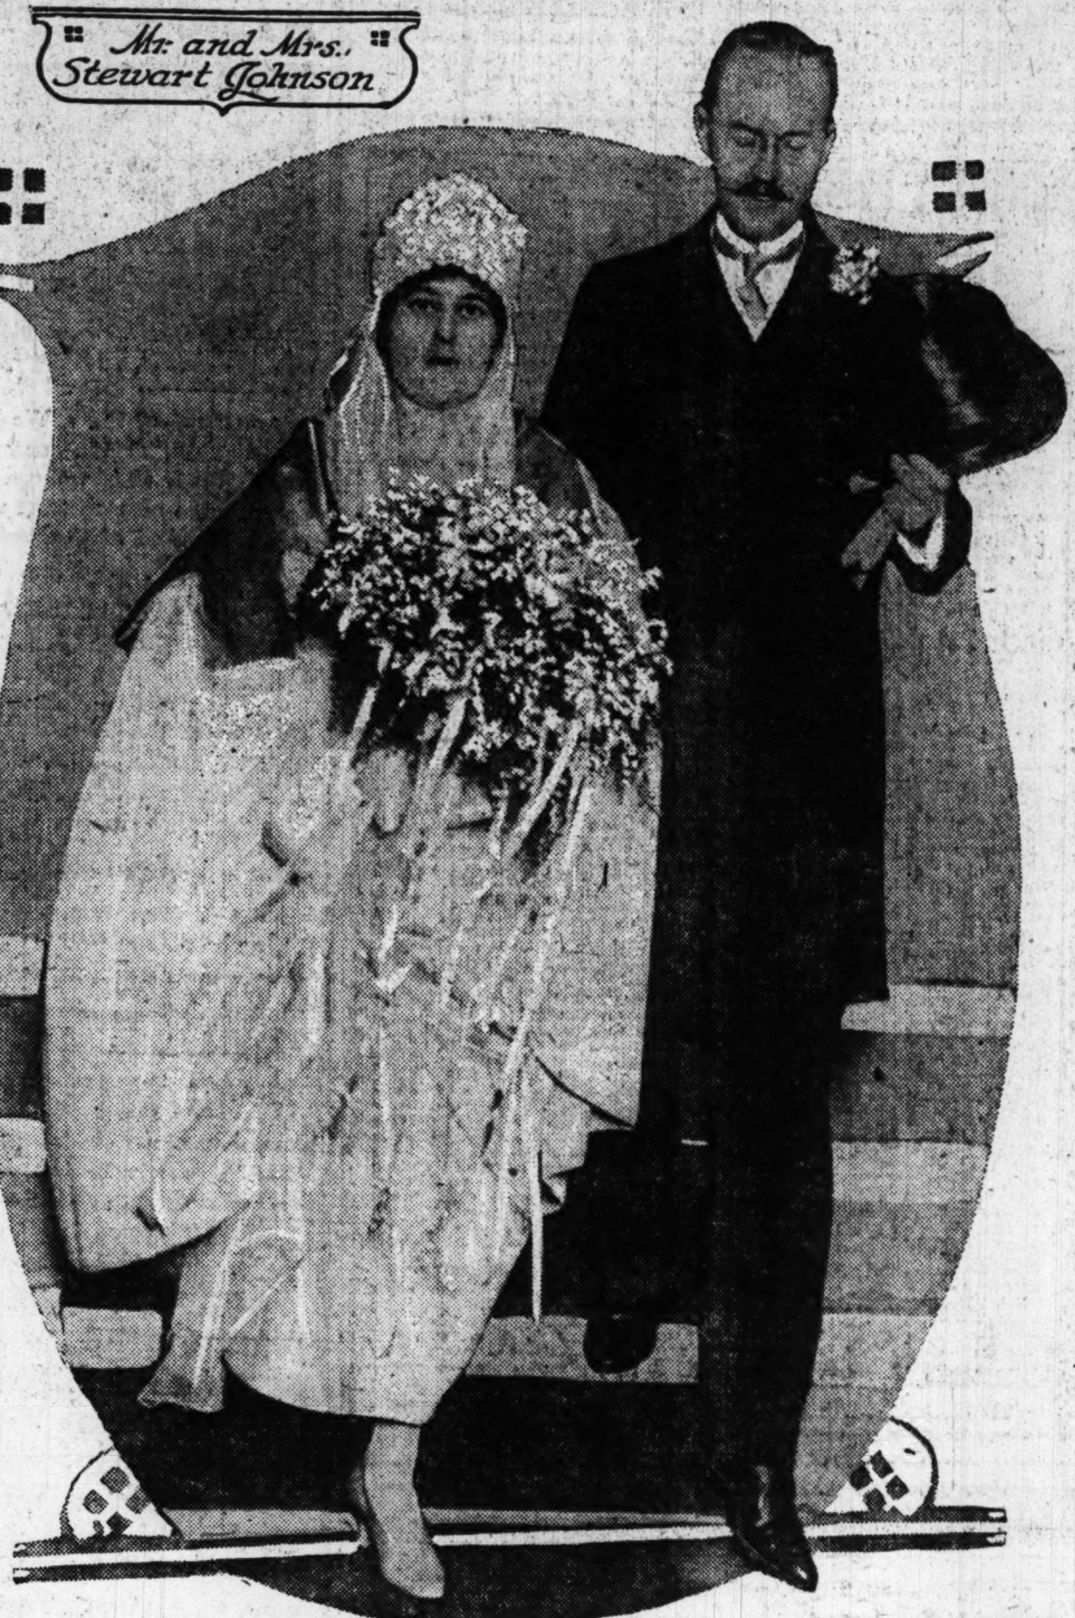
PRINCIPALS IN SOCIETY WEDDING

Tasteful Gowns and Decorations Mark Marriage of Miss Catherine ReQua to Stewart Johnson.



Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Johnson

MISS REQUA IS BRIDE AT PRETTY WEDDING RITUAL

Society Attends Marriage to Stewart Johnson of Winnetka.

BY MARGERY CURREY.

It was a beautiful bridal procession that heralded Miss Catharine Haven ReQua as she approached the altar yesterday afternoon at her wedding to Stewart Johnson, and she herself was a lovely bride in a bridal gown of white satin and silver tissue, with a court train of satin falling from the shoulders. Her veil was caught with a coronet of rose lace.

Mrs. Berrien Clark Eaton was matron of honor and wore a gown of orchid tulle, blue sash, and black velvet hat and carried pink roses. The bridesmaids were similarly gowned and also carried bouquets of pink roses. The bridal bouquet was of lilies of the valley and maiden-hair spray.

Miss Florence Lowden, daughter of the governor, was one of the bridesmaids, and the others were Miss Elizabeth Grey, Miss Isabella Holt and Miss Leota Cotter of St. Louis. Little Helen Hardenbergh, niece of the bridegroom, wearing a frock of white tulle and carrying a basket of pink roses, preceded the bridesmaids.

Brothers Are Uushers.

Attending the bridegroom was Maj. Raymond W. Hardenbergh, his brother-in-law, and the ushers were Haven ReQua and Charles H. ReQua Jr., brothers of the bride, Roy West, Bowles King, and Harold Osborne of New York. The ceremony was performed in Trinity Episcopal church by Bishop Charles P. Anderson, assisted by the Rev. Henry Batcheller.

There were clusters of ascension lilies and white chrysanthemums in the chancel. The surpliced boy choir preceded the bridal procession to the chancel and sang the "Lohengrin" bridal chorus after the processional. The cross was hung with a cluster of lilies, and following the choir came a huge American flag, borne by one of the choir boys.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. ReQua of 3629 Grand boulevard, and the bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Lorenzo M. Johnson of Winnetka. Mr. Johnson is chargé d'affaires at the American legation at San José, Costa Rica, where the young couple will be at home. There was a large reception following the ceremony at the residence of the bride's parents.

Society Notables Attend.

Mrs. ReQua, mother of the bride, was in a gown of gray embroidered tulle and wore a black tulle turban and a chinchilla scarf. Mrs. Johnson wore a gray brocaded satin gown and black velvet hat. Mrs. Frank O. Lowden was in a dark velvet gown and a wide hat, and Mrs. George M. Pullman was in taupe velvet and wore moleskin furs.

Among those at the wedding were Mrs. Chauncey Keep, Mrs. Charles Pope, Mrs. Robert A. Gardner, Mrs. Edward Litzinger, Mrs. A. C. Goodrich, Mr. and Mrs. Latimer Goodrich, Mrs. Howard Van Doren Shaw, Mrs. T. B. Blackstone, Mrs. William S. Monroe, Mrs. George A. Sanderson, Mrs. Charles Henderson, Mrs. Le Roy W. Fuller, Mrs. Bruce Borland, Mrs. Louis A. Seeberger, Mrs. Joseph F. Otis Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Meadowcroft, Dr. and Mrs. E. Wyllys Andrews, Miss Eleanor Andrews, Miss Doris Russell, Miss Helen Hoyne, Miss Marjorie Edwards, Miss Sylvia Shaw, Miss Anita Blair, Miss Naomi Donnelley, and Miss Louise Herrick.

EARLY ON JOB

H. M. Byllesby, Made a Major, Begins Work in Air Service of the Nation.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—H. M. Byllesby, president of the H. M. Byllesby company of Chicago, arrived in Washington today on summons from the war department within five minutes after his commission as major in the air service had been signed and delivered into the hands of Maj. E. Z. Steever, head of the recruiting service for the air section of the army.

Mr. Byllesby is to devote his time until ordered to France to the recruiting work of the air service.

He was sought for this work by war department officials, who made a canvass of the country for some man of big business to enliven the work. When summoned for the task Mr. Byllesby agreed to drop his extensive business interests and responded at once.

"We were looking for a man with a punch for this important task," said a war department official today. "First we went to Chicago and then we picked out Byllesby."

INTELLIGENT WOMEN ARE INVETERATE TRIBUNE READERS FOR ITS NEWS AND FOR ECONOMICAL BUYING

CHICAGO HEART GREATER THAN DEMAND ON IT

More Thanksgiving Dinners than Jackies to Eat Them.

Chaplain Moore at the Great Lakes Naval Training station announced last night that no more invitations for the jackies for Thanksgiving day dinner can be accepted. All available jackies were taken care of with yesterday's mail, and a number of those aready extending invitations may have to be disappointed.

Both the war recreation service and Chaplain Moore announced that if there be others who would like to aid the jackies on this day they may provide flowers for the sick boys in the hospital at the training station.

Try to Raise Carfare.

All efforts now by the many friends who are aiding the Thanksgiving day program will be devoted to raising funds with which to pay the railroad fare of the jackies from the station to Chicago and return.

Chaplain Moore estimates he will be able to provide 5,000 jackies for the Chicago homes, and this will require $5,000 for railroad fare.

"We have the boys who are very anxious to come," said the chaplain, "and the good people in Chicago have the turkeys. The bridge is the distance between the two, and we will have to cross that bridge somehow."

The chaplain does not handle any such funds at the training station.

Roth to Handle Funds.

John C. Roth, formerly of the Congress and Great Northern hotels, who has had considerable experience in raising funds for public celebrations, has undertaken to handle the financial end of the big day's festival, with the approval of Chaplain Moore.

"It is fine of Mr. Roth to take this interest in our festival," said the chaplain, "and I'm sure everything will come out all right. Those who may not be able to get in touch with Mr. Roth, of course, should make their remittances direct to THE TRIBUNE, and I'm sure the good TRIBUNE will be indulgent enough to take charge of this auditing for a few days. We all owe THE TRIBUNE a vote of thanks."

Mr. Roth offered a couple of suggestions, after being informed that the invitation list had been filled.

"I would prefer," he said, "that all donations made to this fund, whether through my efforts or the efforts of others, be transmitted to THE TRIBUNE. Then everybody will be satisfied. I would suggest, also, that the ministers might mention the situation in their churches tomorrow. These boys are anxious to come, and our people have thrown open their homes, but I happen to know that many of them can't come to Chicago unless the transportation is provided. I think there are a great many persons who would be eager to contribute $1."

No Definite Acceptances.

Of the thousands of good men and women who daily have been writing THE TRIBUNE requesting jackies be sent them as guests on Thanksgiving day many request that an immediate answer be given as to whether they can expect the boys from the Great Lakes station.

The routine of notifying those who cannot expect such guests is in the hands of Chaplin Moore and his staff at the Great Lakes. Only those whose

EXCERPTS FROM LETTERS

Excerpts from some of the letters are appended:

Harry Hutton, 1022 Michigan avenue, Evanston—"With reference to the news item in today's TRIBUNE regarding the invitations that are being given the jackies for Thanksgiving day—which is a remarkably fine idea—one of the best things I have heard in this connection was said by a woman with whom I was talking. She said the idea was fine and she hoped to have a dozen jackies at her house for Thanksgiving dinner, but she intended sending each $1 to pay the fares down, so that their dinner would not cost them $1 apiece."

James E. Bruce, president of the Neal Institute company—"I am with you on your proposal to provide a Thanksgiving for the naval boys. Having been an Iowa man for over fifty years, I am naturally more interested in the Iowa boys. I would like to reach all of the naval boys in this vicinity that come from the towns of Anita and Atlantic or vicinity in Cass county, Ia., and entertain them all here. In any event you can count on us entertaining from two to four, even though there are not any of the Iowa boys available."

Mrs. Minnie A. McKelvey, 1024 Lawrence avenue—"Sent in an invitation a few days ago for two jackies for Thanksgiving dinner. Have decided I want two more, so kindly send them together with the first two, making four."

Margaret L. Bartlett, 6638 Glenwood avenue—"I haven't any vacant chair yet, but have a son drafted and a daughter who is a Red Cross nurse, Unit 13, and may be called any time. I would be glad to have two sailor boys. Come as early as you can."

Mrs. G. M. Lawrence, 2228 West One Hundred and Ninth street—Would like to entertain two jackies for Thanksgiving dinner. Two of my daughters are high school girls and will help make the home entertainment interesting.

Mr. and Mrs. George Moore, 554 North Ridgeway avenue—We will be delighted to have the honor of entertaining two or four of our country's good and honorable men and certainly can share part of our feast with them and hope they will come and enjoy the day and live to see many more Thanksgiving days.

Mrs. L. M. Correll, 4338 Cottage Grove avenue—I would be more than pleased to entertain two of our boys. As I have one son in the navy and he is far away from my table on that day, my only wish is that he may be at some one else's table to enjoy his Thanksgiving dinner, and I will try to do by some other mother's boy as I would like to have mine done by.

Mrs. C. J. Porter, 1129 Pratt boulevard, asks for two and says: "We are not at all particular as to who they are, as at this time in our national affairs there is bound to be congeniality among all who are interested in the one big thing."

Mrs. W. W. Payne, 607 East Fiftieth street—I have read with a great deal of pleasure your efforts to provide a day of entertainment and dinner for our Great Lakes boys on Thanksgiving day. I would certainly like to do my share in making this most laudable undertaking a big success. Will you kindly see that two of the jackies are directed to my home on that day? I will see that they are entertained and provided with a real turkey dinner and in such a way as these boys, who are giving up so much for us, should be treated.

Mrs. Ruth James, 3513 Franklin boulevard—I wrote to Capt. Moffett at the Great Lakes asking him for two jackies for Thanksgiving, and now I am going to ask to entertain two more through your paper. If four can or will come all the better. I have two brothers in the service of their country and a good many miles away. So I hope I can make the day pleasant for some one else's brothers. Have plenty of room, should they desire to stay all night.

Mrs. G. J. M.—Referring to my offer to have two jackies for Thanksgiving day, I will say that if the boys delegated to me are unable to pay the carfare and you will let me know I'll be very glad to send them sufficient money to cover the same. If at all possible, I will ask that I be definitely notified. My mother and I live alone, and in these days of the H. C. of L. a turkey dinner is out of the question unless we have two jackies to share it with us; and we will be very much disappointed if they don't come. And the ice at the near by rink is always good, and I know that many of the boys enjoy it greatly.

Harry G. Keats, 1331 Elmdale avenue—Will you kindly extend an invitation to three jackies at Great Lakes Naval Training station to have dinner at my home on Thanksgiving day, preferably three that are far distant from their place of abode and unable to attend their homes by reason thereof? We look forward with anticipation to a very pleasant and happy day for all, and thank THE TRIBUNE for the good being done for the boys.

Mrs. D. Le Blanc, 3252 Franklin boulevard—I will be pleased to have two of our sailor boys for Thanksgiving dinner. If possible, would like to have them about the age of 21 or 22, so they will take the place of my dear boy in France, who is with the United States marines. Otherwise, it will be a sad Thanksgiving for us.

Mrs. R. E. P.—Send us two jackies, some one who is away from home or who has none of their own.

Mrs. John Davies, 749 West Fifty-fourth street—"We ask you to send us two nice, hungry boys on Thanksgiving. I wish also to adopt a boy that I may make him my especial care during this dreadful time. He must be a Protestant and motherless. Can you find one such for me?"

C. S. Machburn and wife, 2841 Lake Park avenue—"If there are available two lonesome Great Lakes jackies who will give us the pleasure of their company we shall be delighted to share with them a real old fashioned Thanksgiving dinner."

Dr. Harris J. Frank—"Your innovation of having families of this city invite as many jackies for Thanksgiving dinner as they can conveniently met with my approval heart and soul, but, unfortunately, I have no home other than the Congress hotel. However, the thought just occurred to me that even in that home I might be able to entertain two or three jackies for dinner, including the round trip fare which you mentioned in today's TRIBUNE."

Mrs. Ruby Phelps, 812 Hyde Park boulevard—"I have a son in the navy and would like to have somebody fill his place on Thanksgiving day. Please send me two friends if possible, as they will feel a little bit more at ease."

R. T. Stanton, 4940 North Lawndale avenue—"I will be glad to have you send me two sailors on Thanksgiving day, and if the issue is oversubscribed for that day you may consider this request a rain check and good for any Sunday after that whenever the boys may be given shore leave."

Mrs. S. R. King, 514 North Elmwood avenue—"Our son is away in service and the younger one will be disappointed if one or two of our boys do not come."

Mrs. A. Seelig, 3847 Jackson boulevard—"You may send me two American sailors for Thanksgiving dinner, preferably Jewish, but any other kind will be just as welcome."

Minnie T. Norton, 5216 Winthrop avenue—"My mother and I will be glad to have four sailor boys spend Thanksgiving day with us, preferably those who are far away from their own people. We request that they be here promptly at 9:30 a. m., as we have an interesting program arranged for the day. We assure them as happy a Thanksgiving day as we can possibly make it, and we thank you for your help in this good work."

About 600 jackies are to be entertained by the following hotels: Auditorium, Blackstone, Brevoort, Congress, Grand Pacific, Great Northern, La Salle, Atlantic, Palmer house, Planters, Sherman, and Stratford. The Chicago Athletic, University, and Union League clubs will take several.

Tests of Honor Men Show a Large but Not Alarming Percentage of Tubercular Cases.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Reports from army medical boards now engaged in examining the drafted men at various national army camps indicate a large but not alarming percentage of tubercular cases. The largest number reported from any one camp was under 400. Every recruit showing the slightest indication of having been infected by this disease is immediately discharged from the camp and his name and address are reported to the health authorities of his home state.

Several important appointments in the army medical corps were announced today by Surgeon General Gorgas, among them being the following for duty in the main American expeditionary hospital in France:

Director general of surgery—Maj. John M. T. Finney, formerly of Johns Hopkins hospital.

Director of laboratory—Lieut. Col. Joseph F. Silver.

Director of skin and internal surgery—Maj. Hugh H. Young, formerly of Johns Hopkins.

KILLED IN CEMETERY ACCIDENT.

Frank Rofchik of 2060 Chase avenue, was mortally hurt late yesterday while working in Rosehill cemetery. A small car, filled with dirt, fell on him.

Hudson Sets Another New Mark in Fine Closed Cars

Fall and Winter Models of Chauffeur-Driven Coaches Now Ready. Reasonably Prompt Deliveries

Hudson makes motor mode. For years the Limousines, Town Cars and Landaulets have been the accepted criterion of discriminating users.

There is never anything extreme in design, nothing to offend good taste, nothing to interfere with serviceability.

The same master coach-builders, who have so long used the Hudson as an opportunity in which to express their skill, are responsible for these new offerings. We think you will agree that they express the ultimate of the coach-building art.

If you would know the predominant popularity of Hudson Super-Six closed cars, mark how they out-number those of any other make on Michigan Avenue. And are not the Hudsons the most beautiful?

There is a fine buoyancy about the Hudson Super-Six closed car not so apparent in other cars. It is due to the Super-Six motor with its great and flexible reserve power. There is no sluggishness in its motion. The action is smooth, quiet, resilient, responsive.

The variety of Hudson Super-Six chauffeur-driven coaches is sufficiently large so as to avoid any possibility of their appearing commonplace. The quantity built is great enough to assure the minimum cost. The almost prohibitive cost of custom-made body is eliminated. There is individuality and smartness and yet there is not a single unconventional detail.

Selections should be made early to assure wanted deliveries.

RELIEVE HEADACHES WITHOUT DOSING

Painful attacks stopped without internal treatment by Sloan's Liniment.

What greater comfort than to get rid of that throbbing, persistent pain in the brow or temple? When of neuralgic origin, Sloan's Liniment applied at painful points or along nerves of forehead promptly soothes and stops the pain. Often a headache goes, if the blood be drawn from the brain by the counter irritation of Sloan's Liniment at the back of the neck, along the spine or at the feet. Headache being also a symptom of various bodily disorders, its constant recurrence may call for a physician's advice.

No need to rub Sloan's Liniment. It penetrates quickly and brings relief at once. In other forms of neuralgia and rheumatism, sciatica, sprains, strains, bruises and all external pains, the most distressing aches disappear before its quick, soothing relief.

Sloan's Liniment is cleaner than mussy plasters or poultices as it does not stain the skin. Generous size bottles at druggists everywhere. 25c, 50c, $1.00.

STEDMAN GANG TRIES TO CHECK DARROW SPEECH

Anti-U. S. Faction Starts Row Among Loyal Socialists.

Socialists, led by Seymour Stedman, tried last night to break up a meeting of patriotic Socialists in Sabin school. The meeting, which had been arranged by the State Council of Defense, was packed by the opposing faction of Socialists, who started their chief outbreak during a speech by Clarence S. Darrow.

Soon after starting his speech Mr. Darrow directed several flings at the Stedman Socialists. Many of the auditors in the front seats turned and looked back, and they kept looking back, as if for a signal, until Seymour Stedman jumped up and, with his fist waving in the air, yelled at the top of his voice. In an instant almost every one of the 500 in the audience was joining in the tumult.

Darrow Hits Back.

Mr. Darrow waited for several minutes until quiet was restored, then he said:

"Well, I suppose I might as well be talking in Elgin, or some other bughouse as to be trying to talk to you, but there must be some of you who have some sense left, even if you are so obsessed with a single idea that you can't listen to anything else. But I want to tell you something.

"When you got the pro-Germans to vote the Socialist ticket at the last election you thought you had made a gain, but you didn't. You have lost ten true Socialists where you gained one by tying your kite to the kaiser. The Socialists gathered every pro-German and every disloyal vote in Chicago, and you were beaten 2 to 1:

"You are terribly, cruelly deceived, those of you who have given your votes against America, in support of the most arbitrary government in the world, and you will repudiate the leaders who have led you wrong."

Some one in the audience yelled "Socialists are anti-kaiser."

"Tell me, my friend with the green necktie," answered Mr. Darrow, "do you want Germany to win or to lose?"

Most of his auditors shouted "lose," but some shouted "win."

"You are so unbalanced about your theories that you are fairly crazy over them," replied the speaker.

Fights to End War.

Mr. Darrow began his talk by saying:

"I do not believe in war and I never did; that is why I favor fighting now. I am not in favor of fighting, but if any man attacks me I will fight.

"When this war was started the kaiser was on a yachting trip in the North sea, trying to establish an alibi. He is not the first assassin in my experience who has tried the same plan.

"There is not an honest person who can look at this war and not realize that Germany started it. Any one who says he doesn't care who wins is dead, no matter whether he has been buried or not.

"The submarine campaign is not war; it is simply murder and piracy. Germany has told us to keep off the seas. If we did so, Patagonia might tell us next year to keep off—and even a pacifist would fight Patagonia if she did.

Germany Bars Democracy.

"Germany is the greatest stumbling block in the world against socialism and democracy. If you don't believe it look up Bebel or Liebknecht.

"It's funny how the kaiser loves the Socialists, especially if they are in America. He's just crazy about American Socialists.

"You cannot stop fighting by voting, for as long as men have human emotions they will fight."

It was at this point that Seymour Stedman jumped up. A squad of police were in the back part of the hall, but they did not interfere with the disturbers, none of whom did anything but shout.

"Some of you are color blind with your eyes and some with your minds," was one of the statements Mr. Darrow made later.

As to Russia.

Taking up the Russian situation, he said:

"Some of you hated Russia when the war began, and so did I. But I don't hate Russia today.

"I am sorry that so many people who came to America for greater liberty and freedom do not know that it is a better country than the one they left.

"You are blind and crazy when you raise your voice against America for the kaiser.

"I have fought for you in the past and shall do so in the future, but before I give my aid to any country against America I will pick the country—and it won't be Germany.

"The kaiser has shed more Socialist blood than any one else in the history of the world.

"Suppose Germany defeats Great Britain, France, the United States and the rabble in Russia, is any one crazy enough to think there will be any liberty left in the world?

"No people ought to be so strongly for the allies as the Russian Jews. The Jews have been murdered and butchered in Russia and came here to have a chance. Every Jew in America who fights his adopted country is fighting to send his brothers back to slavery or to be murdered. With Germany triumphant liberty couldn't last as long as a snowball in hell.

"There is such a thing as common gratitude. The Jews have not fared badly in America. It is now for you to stand by America.

"The Socialists do not believe in a God, but they are praying to the German God for this trip.

"America will never be defeated. When you fight the land of your adoption you are fighting a losing game. Kaiserism must go down. I want to see you with the country and cause that cannot fail."

Miss Alta Henry, who has been selected as one of the members of the team which will represent Northwestern university in the triangular debate with the Universities of Michigan and Chicago, is a senior in the college of liberal arts. She won her place by competition with many men in the tryouts which concluded Friday night. She is the first woman to represent Northwestern university in a debate.

FATHER OF SEVEN KILLS SELF.

John Goratz of 1520 Elston avenue, father of seven children, committed suicide in his room last night by turning on the gas.

MRS. LANGMANN AND STEPSON ARE BOTH HELD

She Charged with Murder—Arsenic in Exhumed Body.

Mrs. Lihse Langmann was held on a warrant charging the murder of her husband, John Langmann, last night, and John Henry Langmann, foster son of the dead man, also was detained by the state's attorney's office after being questioned for several hours.

Questioning of these two disclosed evidence which may result in new charges of murder based on the enigmatic death of Langmann's first wife. The exhumation of her body on Friday revealed the presence of arsenic. Langmann also died of arsenical poisoning.

Young Langmann Accused.

These two events were accompanied by a third in which John L. Kigas, the son of Mrs. Langmann, accused John Henry Langmann of perpetrating both murders. Young Langmann was not formally booked, but Assistant State's Attorney John Lowery said he would hold him pending developments.

Mrs. Langmann gave herself up to the Maxwell street police after they had failed to find her at home at 3936 West Monroe street. When informed of the charge against her she fainted. She answered all questions put by Mr. Lowery until the subject of her dead husband's estate was broached. Then she seemed unable to understand.

When told that the previous Mrs. Langmann died of poison two months before her marriage to Langmann she explained that Dr. Benjamin Milton of 3040 Logan boulevard had administered to the woman medicine containing arsenic.

Doctor's Denial.

Dr. Milton was brought to the state's attorney's office, where he denied this. He said the first Mrs. Langmann was brought to his office by Mrs. Fred Akeron, daughter of the present Mrs. Langmann. The doctor also said he was called in at Langmann's death, but refused to issue a death certificate.

Langmann's estate, consisting mainly of $10,000 in insurance, was discussed by Attorney Henry Frankfurter, who told Mr. Lowery that Mrs. Langmann came to him the day after her husband's funeral and asked him to represent her and obtain her appointment as administrator. He filed a petition in her behalf.

Kigas made his accusation against his foster brother after Mrs. Langmann had been held in $5,000 bonds on the recommendation of Coroner Hoffman.

KILLED BY STREET CAR.

Karl Johanson of 5212 Hutchinson street was instantly killed last night when he was struck by a Fullerton avenue car at North Kilbourne avenue.

Murder Verdict Returned in Child's Death Inquiry

A verdict that death was due to murder was brought in yesterday by the coroner's jury that investigated the case of the baby girl whose body was found yesterday on the estate of Abram Poole at Lake Forest. It was found the infant had been killed by strangulation caused by a white ribbon tied around the neck and that cheese cloth had been wrapped around that and tied by a cord.

The Poole estate is now occupied by K. C. Reid, son-in-law of John G. Shedd. It is close to the estates of Byron L. Smith and Clayton Mark. The autopsy, which was performed under the direction of Coroner John L. Taylor, showed that the child had lived after birth.

Carr, editor of the Christian Socialist. Bernard McMahon, a member of the Socialist party of Chicago, is to preside.

The meeting is also for workingmen. It is to be held under the auspices of the Chicago branch of the Alliance for Labor and Democracy, a patriotic union labor organization. Charles Dold, international president of the Piano Workers' union, is to be one of the speakers.

The general subject of all speakers will be "Democracy and the War." The meeting is to be the first the Alliance for Labor and Democracy has held in Chicago.

The meeting is to begin at 2:30 o'clock sharp and there will be no reserved seats.

This will be given at the clubrooms in the Fine Arts building. At the dinner ten men will be seated at each table, which will also have a host and hostess provided by the club. At the conclusion of the dinner the hostesses will retire and the hosts will remain in charge of the entertainment at the smoker.

HEATED WORDS AGAIN FEATURE CERMAK HEARING

Judge Olson Suppresses Gemmill After Much Talk.

Investigation by a committee of judges of Judge W. N. Gemmill's charges against Chief Bailiff Anton Cermak of the Municipal court ran all day yesterday. There was a riot of comedy furnished by witnesses and frequent clashes between Cermak and Gemmill. The latter was twice silenced by Chief Justice Olson, chairman of the investigating committee, the other members of which are Judges Rafferty, Goodnow, and Cook. Spectators who came for a show were not disappointed.

At the conclusion, when the evidence offered had been reviewed, the following charges had been thrashed out:

That a lawyer, of his own free will, gave a deputy bailiff $3 to perform some official business.

That deputy bailiffs threatened to "get something on" the lawyer for testifying.

That certain bailiffs had used insulting language before citizens, one a woman.

Testimony Conflicts.

In the first instance it was a case of one man's word against another's, both equally positive. One man who had accused a bailiff of using insulting language later heard three of his neighbors testify they wouldn't believe him under oath. On top of that, Judge Gemmill twice volunteered that he didn't doubt Cermak's integrity for a moment.

Attorney Rush B. Johnson, 2551 Milton avenue, and Bailiff Isaac Doff gave the spectators their money's worth. Johnson said he gave Bailiff Joseph Cohen the $3. Cohen hadn't asked for it. Johnson only surmised from Cohen's attitude he wanted it, wherefore he "shelled out." And two bailiffs, names unknown, had said the office would "get something on him" if he testified, he declared.

From the security of the stand he remarked offhand that a man "couldn't get any service in the bailiff's office without paying gratuity," and then practically backed water when the judges took him up. At one point, while off the stand, Johnson, in an argument, raised his clenched fist at Cermak and shouted, "You can't get me; you're not big enough." The amiable Mr. Doff edged up to be on hand for any eventuality.

An Evil Eye.

Johnson beat a hasty retreat in the direction of the safe arms of the witness chair at the earliest possible moment. He pointed at Doff.

"Look at him stare at me," he cried. "He looks as though he'd like to beat me up."

Everybody roared and Judge Olson inquired: "Has he an evil eye?" and Johnson allowed Doff had.

When Cohen was called to the stand he heatedly denied Johnson's charge.

Attorney Joel Baker, Marquette building, had some interesting things to say of Bailiff Mike Levy and Judge Woods, the latter being Cermak's chief assistant. It pertained to the replevin of a piano. Baker claimed that Levy passed up taking the piano because a brother of the woman owner, a man named Blumenthal in the employ of one of the Benders, dealers in second hand furniture, saw Woods at the bailiff's office and Woods ordered Levy to wait. Woods' explanation was that Levy was set on by three women when he went to get the piano and Baker declined to come in and point out the instrument.

Woman Makes Charges.

Mrs. Agnes Turner Northrup, 1514 East Sixty-first street, testified that Deputy Bailiff William Walsh, on seeking to serve her with a summons in a civil suit, had caught her by the arm and used vile language; in fact, had called her a "crook" for "dodging and trying to get away." Her husband testified he heard the bailiff, but did nothing.

Walsh testified the pair had tried every way to evade him and the summons and Mrs. Northrup was exceedingly wroth when served. He denied unseemly language.

MEAT CHEAPER SOON, RULING OF U. S. FOOD HEADS

Cut Will Come with Plan to Control Packers, Cotton Says.

Meat is to be cheaper, according to a statement made yesterday by Joseph P. Cotton, head of the meat division of the food administration.

The amount of profit to be allowed to packers is to be made known when the decision regarding methods to be used by the government in its control of the packing industries is announced.

"It is probable that the statement will be given to the public within a few days," said Mr. Cotton yesterday. "The delay has been due to the fact that the questions involved are so unusually complicated."

More than 10,000,000 pounds of pork products have just been bought in Chicago for Italy. Large orders for Great Britain and France are also being filled.

In accordance with the provisions of the Lever law, more than 20,000,000 pounds of poultry in cold storage must be sold before Dec. 1. The Lever law prohibits holding foodstuffs in storage more than twelve months.

Gotham Food Chief Sends an Ultimatum to Hoover

New York, Nov. 17.—[Special.]—John Mitchell, chairman of the state food commission, has notified Food Administrator Hoover in Washington that unless he consents to a coalition of the national, state and city food administration in New York he will send his resignation to Gov. Whitman next Saturday and quit his job. That it would be impossible to accomplish real remedial work with the national, state and city commissions working at odds, has become more and more apparent as the situation has been canvassed.

DELINQUENCY CASE DROPPED.

A charge of contributing to the delinquency of a child, brought against Matilda Normal, 1733 West Monroe street, was dismissed yesterday by Judge Stelk when it was shown that Hattie Czajka, to whose delinquency the Normal woman is alleged to have contributed, is 18 years old instead of 14.

EQUALITY LEAGUE IS TOLD ITS VOTE AIDS EFFICIENCY

The question "Has public efficiency been improved by the woman's vote?" was answered in the affirmative yesterday by James Skinner, formerly corporation counsel, who was one of the speakers at the regular meeting of the Political Equality league.

"Suffrage makes women broader," said the speaker. He urged the women to get up a municipal voters' league of their own.

Miss Nellie Carlin, public guardian urged the need of a woman state's attorney in the Court of Domestic Relations and in the Morals court and women's shelter houses, such as that advocated by the Woman's Protective association. Judge Stelk of the Court of Domestic Relations said that not only women state's attorneys but a woman judge were necessary. He announced that unless some way were found for taking care of the families of men whom he found it necessary to send to the bridewell he would put cots in his courtroom for them to sleep on, or send them to the bridewell and make the prodigal husbands sleep on the street.

Pupil Company Presents New Play for Charity

In aid of a fund to establish regular entertainments for various charitable institutions "The Trial of Tom, Tom, the Piper's Son," was played by a pupil company in Central Music hall yesterday. It is proposed to establish entertainments for these schools: Home for Destitute Crippled Children, Home for the Friendless, Juvenile Detention home, Florence Crittenden anchorage, Frances Juvenile home, Old Ladies' home, and St. Mary's mission.

U. S. WILL USE STOCK SHOW TO TEACH WAR NEED

The United States government is going to use the International Live Stock show in Chicago as a great war university for the farmers, and especially the stock breeders. The show is to be held at the stockyards from Dec. 1 to 8.

In a letter to B. H. Heide, manager of the show, Carl Vrooman, assistant secretary of agriculture, writes:

"The importance of the live stock show this year cannot be overestimated. The live stock show serves to emphasize the importance of continuing our live stock pursuits on a broader scope than ever before. This is important to the scientist, the farmer, and the community."

The government will be represented in every aspect of the show, but will lay especial emphasis on the necessity for food conservation.

Gov. Lowden has appointed delegations, including from one to three men, from each county who are to take the lessons learned at the show back to the farmers of Illinois who may be unable to attend themselves.

New buildings in the vicinity of the amphitheater have been erected to house the additional exhibits which have been entered, and the competition for prizes is to be unusually keen.

Retail Dealers Ordered to Stop "Combination Sales"

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—Retail dealers were ordered by the food administration today to stop the widely prevalent practice of making "combination sales," requiring customers to make other purchases in order to obtain a certain commodity. One exception is made—on all sales of sugar the dealer may require a customer to buy twice the weight of cornmeal.

Cadillac excellence in Year 'Round Bodies goes as deep as Cadillac mechanical superiority

Back of everything the Cadillac organization produces there is a soundness of design, a consideration for endurance, which is largely responsible for Cadillac success. It is not there to be seen, but to serve.

Thus, to the unpracticed eye, there may be nothing apparent about the Cadillac "Eight" Chassis which is astonishingly superior. Yet there is not a man who does not look at it with respect and admiration. Its perfection is so well known.

In Cadillac Year 'Round types there is as much to admire, to satisfy the eye, as master designers can conceive. But the enduring satisfaction you cannot see. You just know that, being part of a Cadillac, these Year 'Round bodies, like the Cadillac chassis, will give superb ease and lasting service.

Cadillac production of Year 'Round types is larger than most makers produce of all types combined. This alone holds down the cost to favorable position. Thus Cadillac value, as usual, finds no comparison.

So choose a Cadillac—for the everlasting service you know is in the Cadillac—body and chassis. For the certainty of highest quality and soundest value.

And choose a Year 'Round Cadillac because you will want to use it the year 'round—because a touring car in winter is little better than a tent—because even sleeping porches have glass windows—because pleasurable miles in a Year 'Round car cost less per mile—because in summer Cadillac Year 'Round types may be fully opened.

Every wanted type is available—most of them for immediate delivery. Standard Limousine, Imperial Limousine, Landaulet Limousine, Town Car, Landaulet Town Car—five types chauffeur driven. Brougham (5-7 passenger) and Victoria-Convertible (3-4 passenger) for the owner driver.

PAIGE

The Most Beautiful Car in America

Zero Weather Is The Only Fair Test

These comparatively mild Fall days, please remember, are no test of motor efficiency.

Any reputable gasoline engine will start promptly when the temperature is more than 50 degrees Fahrenheit. Likewise, any reputable engine will vaporize its fuel very satisfactorily under such conditions.

But wait until a few months roll around. Wait until the cold blasts of January, February and March arrive. Then, you will understand what we mean when we speak of practical and impractical motors for winter driving.

At that time we sincerely trust that your enclosed car will be a Paige. If so, you will be altogether independent of weather conditions. With the thermometer at zero you will be able to start instantly—roll blithely away while much more expensive cars are temporarily out of commission.

Let us put it in still plainer terms. The new Paige power plant is the only practical internal combustion engine for winter driving in a motor car. This is not an exaggerated statement. It is a provable fact, and the proofs are ready for your inspection at a minute's notice.

There is no mystery about the matter, either. Paige cold weather superiority rests upon a combination of three engineering features found exclusively in our new enclosed car motors. They are an Electrical Gasoline Heater, a Super-heated Manifold and a Valve Polishing Device.

If you will call at our show rooms, we will gladly explain just why these features have overcome the unpleasant trials of winter motoring. We will place every card face up on the table and let you determine whether or not our sweeping claims are justified.

Under the circumstances, can you afford to buy any enclosed car until you have investigated the Paige?

PRINCE OF PEN AND ROMANCES SOUGHT BY LAW

Easy Way with Women and Check Book Fails at Last.

Harvey Bertram Smith, locally named in Michigan as "Prince Charming," is being sought by the Chicago police at the faded end of a romance in which the daughter of a wealthy Michigan manufacturer is the alleged disillusioned victim and in which at least four other women have played parts.

"Prince Charming," a graduate of the University of Michigan and a person of many allurements, is said to be the man responsible for some worthless checks and also a string of debts contracted while establishing a reputation for wholeheartedness in the vicinity of Lake Chapin and Detroit, Mich.

Played Raleigh to Heiress.

He is said to have played Sir Walter Raleigh to Miss Wilhelma Hipp of Jackson, Miss., when that young woman met with an accident in Detroit. His courtesy gained him the kindly graces of Miss Hipp and she invited him to her home. He wooed and they were married.

"Prince Charming" is said to have achieved rare note as an entertainer. He fed the minister liberally and gave him a season ticket to the Chautauqua meeting. He gave automobile parties to South Bend and devised other jolly and novel stunts for the younger set.

After his marriage to Miss Hipp he presented her with a bungalow at Lake Chapin and called it Home Crest Lodge and he saw to it that the lodge remained neither doleful nor empty. He made tourists welcome in that vicinity by garnishing all the trees and fence posts for miles around with sign boards describing the country and indicating the directions. Once when a motorcyclist was injured near the lodge the master thereof said it was no matter; sent him forthwith to a hospital to be fixed up and paid the bills.

Money Also Disappears.

He gave dances and aided the local charities. He was just about to be set up in a fine business when suddenly he disappeared. It is said by the police that there also disappeared $1,000 of his wife's, the wedding certificate, and his wife's car. On the way to Chicago he passed a check for $60 on a banker friend. Then he wired for $40 more. The banker grew suspicious and notified the Chicago police.

Meanwhile a former wife with their child popped up in Traverse City, Mich. Also another wife in Milwaukee. Two women who claim to have been wooed to the point of proposals forwarded information of their affairs from Jersey City and Buffalo. In the meantime "Prince Charming" is lying exceedingly low.

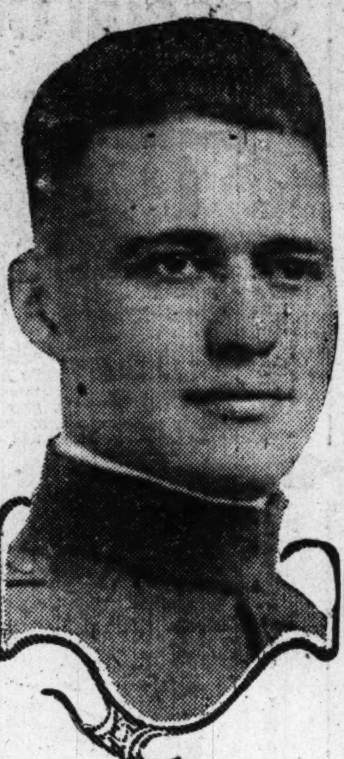
Chicago Youth Does His Bit in France Despite Rejection by U. S. Army.



H. Everett Wilson.

H. Everett Wilson, a son of Harry Wilson of Chicago, is going to serve his country despite the fact that the loss of one eye barred him out of the regular army.

Wilson, who is 22 years old, is in France. Before the United States took over the transport service he drove a munition truck for a French division. He now is a chauffeur for a staff officer of the Red Cross.

Word was received by his parents yesterday that he had been cited for bravery by the commander of his former division.

Gen. Maistre, commander of the Sixth French army, has this to say in orders citing Wilson's bravery:

"While subjected to a very violent bombardment in the course of a transport of material in proximity to the front lines gave proof under the command of Chief Scully, ably assisted by Drivers Thompson and Macy, of bravery and a high sense of duty, effecting the unloading of the material, doing everything possible to succor the wounded, and retiring with all their cars."

LINE UP LOYAL SPEAKING CORPS FOR THE MIDWEST

State Councils and Four-Minute-Men Plan Campaigns.

Representatives of the middle western state Councils of Defense and of the organizations of Four-Minute Men met in Chicago yesterday to plan a campaign of public meetings and speeches to inform the public of the government's needs. The Four-Minute Men had luncheon at the Morrison hotel and the state officials met at the headquarters of the Illinois Council of Defense.

The Councils of Defense propose coordinating the propagandist efforts of all organizations now at work in the various states.

Arthur E. Bestor, chief of the speaking division of the Committee on Public Information, discussed special problems in various states.

Organizations at Work.

Representatives of the eleven states which had sent men to the meeting agreed to establish the closest coöperation possible, and to have all the meetings that can be so arranged take place under the management of the Council of Defense of the state where the sessions are held. More than forty patriotic organizations are at work.

Illinois was represented by Harold Ickes, Indiana by Will Hays and J. J. Pettijohn, and Wisconsin by A. H. Melville.

John H. Winterbotham, mid-west representative of the section on coöperation of states, of the Council of National Defense, was also present.

Four Minute Men.

"Get the government message over" was the subject of discussion yesterday at the meeting of the chairmen of the Four Minute Men. Chief among the speakers was Charles Edward Russell, a member of the Root commission to Russia; James O. Jeffrey, chairman of the membership committee of the Four Minute Men, and William McCormick Blair, one of the founders of the movement.

"We are able in Chicago to supply speakers in thirteen different languages besides English," said Mr. McCormick. "We have men who talk Turkish and, if needed, we can furnish speakers of Chinese and Japanese."

AT LEAST THESE 108,707 WOMEN ARE PATRIOTS

Incomplete Returns Show That Many Registered.

Registration statistics are difficult for the members of the woman's committee, and full reports are not yet available from all the wards. It was announced yesterday, however, that up to Nov. 15 the count showed 108,707 cards returned to headquarters and $10,672.72 collected through the 10 cent registration fees. The Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Seventeenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth, Thirtieth, and Thirty-first wards have not reported, and registration in the Thirty-third ward and at 120 West Adams street is still going on. Here is the list of ward leaders who have reported and the number of registrants to the credit of each:

Registration has already procured a complete staff of able assistants for the work of the Woman's committee and it is expected that the files will be used more and more as the need for more workers arises. The members of the committee ask to have it emphasized again that "it is never too late to register for war service at home or abroad."

Couple Lose License to Wed, but Seek No Other

A marriage license, which was found on a Cottage Grove avenue car last Thursday by a conductor, was returned to the county clerk's office yesterday. On the records it shows that a Eugene A. Bandean, 27 years old, and Miss Marie Waldorf, 21, received the license last Wednesday. There is no explanation of their failure to use it.

DOMESTIC GRIEF LEADS WOMAN TO KILL HERSELF

Body Found in Gas Filled Room; Identified by Her Sister.

Grief over the disruption of her home is believed to have sent Mrs. Gertrude Olson to suicide, in the opinion of the police, who yesterday succeeded in identifying the body of the young woman in a morgue at 2015 West Madison street. Mrs. Olson ended her life in a rooming house at 1921 West Adams street by inhaling gas.

Identification was made by the girl's sister after Martin Olson of 4242 Cortez street, the husband, had said he was not convinced the body was that of his wife. Later in the evening Lawrence J. Hanlon of 6162 Indiana avenue, a cousin of Mrs. Olson, was reached and his evidence completed the identification.

According to the young woman's friends, she came to Chicago from La Crosse, Wis. She formerly had lived in Oelwein, Ia. She obtained a place in a loop store and continued there until her death. It became known she was separated from her husband two or three months ago and this is believed to have upset her.

Found with Smashed Skull Near Becker Murder Scene

Unconscious, with gashes in his head similar to those suffered by John A. Becker, jackie found apparently murdered on Sunday in the Sharples building, Lawrence Durbin of Belleville, O., was found early yesterday at West Adams and South Canal streets.

Durbin's condition is serious. His skull is believed to be fractured. A man accosted him near the Union station, Durbin said, and claimed the suitcase he was carrying. Durbin was then struck from behind while they were arguing. The suitcase and $40 were taken. Durbin said he believes he was hit with an ax. His wounds indicate that might be true.

200,000 ARMY EXEMPTS FACE WAR SERVICE

Will Be Used with Special Forces Behind the Firing Line.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Nearly 200,000 men already called for examination before draft boards and exempted because of physical defects may find they are not exempted at all and may be at the head of the list for next national army draft, under the new draft regulations made public today. This was the opinion expressed by officials of the provost marshal general's office today.

The new regulations provide that men suffering from minor ailments, such as flat foot, slightly defective vision, and other troubles that would preclude their valuable service on the firing line, may be certified for service with special forces where their work will not require the rigorous body or physical perfection of men in the fighting front.

Accurate estimates are not yet available at draft headquarters, but on unofficial returns from the first draft it is estimated that possibly 400,000 or 500,000 eligible called for examination were exempted because of physical defects. In nearly half of these cases the ailments were of such a minor charactr as to permit the eligibles to earn their own livelihood without their defects being commonly known. These men will be used in the organization of road and wagon gangs and in special trades in which they are especially qualified.

Recall All Exemptions.

It is not believed they will become subject to the first draft, all of which probably will be mobilized by Dec. 15, the time at which the new regulations go into effect, but they will be placed back on the list of eligibles in their regular order of liability.

Most of the regulations, including the parts of more importance to the public, become effective at noon of Dec. 15, and up to that time all men called for mobilization or entrainment will be called under first draft regulations. After that date and as soon as a classification list is drawn up from the new questionnaires men now selected for service but not yet called will be reclassified under the new regulations, but in most cases their order of responsibility for service will not be greatly changed.

All registrants not yet in camp when the new regulations become effective will be handled according to the new regulations after Dec. 18. All exemptions and discharges will be recalled and the exempted or discharged eligibles will be reclassified and reëxamined.

Exempt Ship Builders.

The principle changes in the new regulations will be: Exemption of all eligibles entered on the draft list as being engaged in the building of ships either for the navy or the emergency fleet corporation.

The powers of local boards will be extended to fixing the classification of all eligibles, including agricultural and industrial laborers and district or appeal boards will become simply reviewing boards to determine whether classifications made by the local board were correct.

Boards of lawyers will be formed in every community, to serve without fees, who will advise all registrants about the correct way to answer the question forms or questionnaires that will be sent them by local boards.

To Halt Army Enlistments.

Local boards will be constituted judicial bodies, with power to summon and swear witnesses for hearings on any case. They may require the police to serve summons and witnesses who fail to respond will be practically in contempt of court and their cases will be turned over to the local courts.

After Dec. 15 there will be no voluntary enlistments in the army, all entrance to the army being through mobilization camps, and until complete lists are made up by local boards from questionaire returns, there will be no enlistments in the marine corps or navy by draft eligibles except upon certification from their local boards that they are sufficiently far down on the list to make them unlikely to be called within a forthcoming draft call, and finally there will be created in every community a medical advisory board of review.

Protect Married Men.

Men of draft age with dependent relatives are placed in a more secure position. There is no way under the new plan in which men with dependents can be called up for service out of their turn. Added protection for dependents is secured by the requirement in cases where the registrant seeks to waive his deferred classification status that waivers also must be obtained from those dependent upon him before he can be taken into the military service.

The effect of the regulations is to close the ranks of the army, navy, or marine corps absolutely to men between 21 and 31 years old where they have dependents upon them who would suffer if they went to the front. Local boards are constituted judges of all such cases.

DRAFT CLASSES FIXED BY QUESTIONS

CLASSIFICATION of all men registered for military service in Chicago—not actually called to the colors—begins in Chicago on Dec. 10 under the new rules and regulations governing the draft promulgated yesterday by the war department.

The order specifically says: "All exemptions and discharges made prior to the date of these rules and regulations and all certificates in evidence thereof are hereby revoked, and all such certificates heretofore issued shall have no further validity." This means that the local registration boards in each district shall proceed to classify all registered men, not already in the training camps, separating them into five groups.

Asks 147 Questions.

To each registrant will be mailed a copy of the government's "questionnaire." This carries extended and specific instructions as to how it shall be filled out and sworn to, and carries a total of 147 questions, separated into twelve "series." The blanks will be sent to 5 per cent of the registrants in each district, on each day, beginning Dec. 10 in Chicago. The individual has seven days from the date of mailing, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, to return the blanks properly filled out.

He is required to read the entire document carefully, make his answers to such of the 147 questions as he desires to answer, and then to return to page 1 of the form, where he makes a cross in the blank space before the separate classifications there enumerated.

Can Waive All Claims.

If he prefers to waive all claims for exemption, there is a place for that. He then signs his name, and makes oath to the entire document before proper officers, who are stipulated in the questionnaire.

Every registrant must answer all of the fifteen questions in Series 1. These are general and furnish a line on the capabilities and experience of the registrant. They include questions as to full name, present age, occupation and residence, name and address of nearest relative; employer's name and address; all occupations held during the last ten years and length of time in each occupation; number of hours per week occupied during the period since May 18, 1917, when the draft law became effective; preferred occupation; previous military service; preferred branch of army service; and character and scope of education.

Eighty-seven different occupations are then named and the registrant is required to draw one line under those at which he has worked and two lines under those in which he considers himself expert. He is asked if he has been convicted of a crime, and if so, what, when and where; whether he is confined in a prison or reformatory or is out on bail awaiting trial.

Must Answer Two Questions.

Every registrant must answer the first two questions in series 2, covering physical fitness. The first is: "State your weight and height stripped." The second is, "Are you in sound health mentally and physicaly?" If the answer is "no" he is required to furnish details of his ailment or physical deformity and the names and addresses of physicians who have administered treatment during the last twelve months. If he is an inmate of an asylum, institution or hospital, he is required to give the facts.

Every registrant must answer the first question by "yes" or "no," in each of the series from 3 to 12 inclusive. Series 3 starts: "Are you a federal or state legislative, executive or judicial officer?" If the answer is "no" he answers no more questions in the series. If "yes" he must stipulate the exact designation of his office, when he entered office and when he will cease to occupy it.

Series 4 starts: "Are you a regular or a duly ordained minister of religion and if so, what sect or organization?" If "no" he answers no more questions in that list. If "yes" he gives the details concerning his religious labors and is asked if he follows any additional occupation and is so, what?

For Divinity Students.

Series 5 deals with divinity students: "Were you on May 18, 1917, a student preparing for the ministry?" is the first question. If "yes" he must give the name and location of all divinity schools attended; whether any of them is wholly or partially a correspondence school, and if he has ceased to be a divinity student since May 18. Answers in this series must be supported by affidavit.

Series 6 concerns the military or naval service. The first question is: "Are you in any branch of the military or naval service of the United States?" If "yes" complete detail of rank, organization and duration of service must follow.

Aliens May Waive Exemption.

"Are you a citizen of the United States?" heads series 7. If the answer is "yes" no further answers are required in the series. Question 2 is, "Do you claim exemption from military service because you are not a citizens?" If the answer is "yes" the registrant must state where and when he was born; when and how he arrived in this country; whether by vessel or other means; whence he came; whether he came with his parents; whether either of his parents has been naturalized; whether he ever voted or registered for voting in the United States and if so where; whether he has taken out first naturalization papers, and concludes: "Are you willing to return to your native country and enter its military service?"

Series 8 has to do with county or municipal officials, custom house or postal employés or employés of the United States who have been designated by the president as liable for exemption from military service. If the registrant comes within this classification he must state the designation of his office; whether elected or appointed; the exact place where he performs his duties; how long he has held office or employment; the character and duration of education, training and experience for his position; the nature of his work, and how many persons of same or similar grade of work are employed in his establishment.

Religious Convictions Considered.

The subject of religious convictions is handled in Series 9. "Are you a member of a religious sect or organization whose creed forbids you to participate in war in any form? If so state the name of the sect and the location of its governing body or head," is the question put to all registrants. If "yes" he must state the date and place of the organization of his local church, the number of adherents of such sect in the United States, when such sect adopted opposition to war as part of its creed; when, where, and how he became a member of such sect, and the name and location of the particular local congregation to which he belongs.

Dependency Important Factor.

The highly important factor of dependency is the subject of Series 10. All registrants are required to answer the first question: "Have you a wife or child or aged, infirm, or invalid parents, or grandparents, or brother under 16, or sister under 18 years of age, or a helpless brother, or sister of whatever age, mainly dependent on your physical or mental labor for support?" If the registrant intends to claim exemption on account of having dependents he answers the question with a "yes," and the following thirty questions must be supported fully by affidavits. If he does not intend to claim exemption for such reason he answers "no" to the first question and is not required to answer the other thirty. If he is claiming exemption and answers "yes" he states whether he is married, single, or divorced; when, where, and by whom he was married, if he is; name, address, age, and relationship of each person mainly dependent upon him for support; which of such dependents lives with him and for how long; if any dependent is a stepchild, adopted child, or foster child, when such relationship began; when he began contributing to the support of each dependent; the approximate total and the average monthly amount of his support to his wife and children during the last twelve months; how much he has contributed to the support of each other dependent during the last twelve months; whether each of such dependents is wholly dependent for support upon the registrant, if any dependent, other than wife or child, has a brother, father, mother, uncle, aunt, husband, wife, or child, and if so, age, address, and occupation of each.

Questioned as to Income.

He is then asked what was his total income from all sources during the last twelve months; how much in cash and how much in other things of value; how much was the fruit of his mental or physical labor; a full statement of all property owned or held in trust for him, whether income producing or not, and the net income from same for the last year. Then he is asked if he owns the house he lives in; if any of his dependents owns it; if he rents his house and if so the monthly rent and name and address of his landlord; if he has paid any taxes in the last year, and if so, how much real estate and how much personal property, also income tax; and if there are any incumbrances of any kind upon any property he owns, full details concerning same. He must state in money value all property owned or held in trust for any named dependent; the earnings of each dependent for the last year; the amount of contributions to each dependent's support made by persons other than the registrant; the amount per month registrant considers necessary for the support of all his dependents; whether his wife has been employed part or all of the last twelve months, the nature of her employment and her earnings; whether his wife ever has been employed and if so what was her calling; whether his wife is trained or skilled in any calling; the condition of health of his wife; full answer as to whether his wife lives with her parents; and full answer as to how much he pays for his board or subsistence to any named dependent, if he lives with such dependent, other than his wife or children.

Affidavits Are Required.

Series 11 deals with industrial occupations. Every registrant must answer question 1, as follows: "Are you engaged in an industrial enterprise necessary [1] to the maintenance of the military establishment, or [2], to the effective operation of the military forces, or [3] to the maintenance of the national interests during the emergency?" If "yes," and he claims exemption, he must answer twenty-two more questions and must file two supporting affidavits. If he is an employé the affidavits must be made by his immediate superior and by the executive head of the enterprise. If he is in business for himself the affidavits must be made by his co-partner, if he has one, and a near neighbor, or if he has no co-partner by two near neighbors.

The following questions cover the nature of the enterprise; its name and location; what it produces; how much time he gives to the enterprise; if not, what does he do; what trade name is applied to his job, such as "laborer," "skilled laborer," "foreman," "manager," etc.; the registrant's general duties; how long he has been engaged in such work, his education, training and experience for his work, and his reasons why he cannot easily be replaced by another.

Must State Earnings.

An employé is required to answer further questions, covering the number of employés in the plant, how many persons employed in the same kind of work. A man in business for himself is required to state his earnings per day, week or month; whether in business as an individual or copartner; amount of capital he has invested; how long he has been engaged in such enterprise; whether such enterprise is a solvent, prosperous and going concern; his net earnings from such business for twelve months past; how many persons he employs, and whether he has any person related by blood, marriage or contract who can assist in the management of the enterprise, and why he cannot take his place during the registrant's absence.

The last series, 12, concerns agricultural occupations.

10,000 More Sets For Chicago

We have already given 20,000 sets of dessert molds to the women of Chicago and vicinity. But now we offer 10,000 more to homes which did not get them.

We do this to help you serve Jiffy-Jell in the most inviting ways.

Jiffy-Jell is the new-day type of quick gelatine desserts. It is the latest creation of the leading gelatine expert. It is made in the model food plant of America.

The owners of Jiffy-Jell make an extra-grade gelatine, known as Waukesha Gelatine. It is a rare, dainty product which costs twice as much as the common. And that grade only is used in Jiffy-Jell.

No Such Flavors

In old-time desserts of this kind the flavors came mixed with the powder. The desserts never tasted like real fruit dainties.

In Jiffy-Jell the flavors come sealed in glass vials. All their freshness, all their rich fruit flavor is preserved.

Then each fruit flavor is made from the fruit itself. Not one is artificial.

Pineapple Flavor for Salads or Dessert Jells

All are highly concentrated, so every dessert has a wealth of ripe fruit taste. For instance, half a ripe pineapple is used in the flavor for one Jiffy-Jell dessert.

You add the flavor from the vial when the jell has partly cooled. So the flavors are not scalded by the boiling water, as in other kinds of gelatine desserts.

For garnish jell there is Mint flavor, made from fresh mint leaves. For salad jell there is Lime flavor, made from lime fruit. It makes a tart, zestful, green jell. And there are new fruit flavors—like Loganberry—never used before.

Try Two Kinds

All we ask is that you buy two packages of Jiffy-Jell to try. Learn what it means to you. It will be a revelation.

Then send us this coupon for the molds. We will send the Pint Mold or three Individual Molds for just the cost of mailing—10 cents. Or we will send six Individual Molds for 20 cents.

KILL! KILL! KILL! NOW WAR ORDER OF CAMP GRANT

French and British Drive Home Real Battle Spirit.

BY PARKE BROWN.

Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—British and French officers have put a new word into the lexicon of Camp Grant.

"Kill!"

That's the word. It may shock the folks back home, but their sensibilities will not be allowed to stand in the way of awakening the new American soldier to the deadliness of the "battle spirit" that the allied officers say will win the war.

The score of veterans from the British and French forces assigned as instructors here are pounding that point home in all their work.

"Kill him!" shouts one, demonstrating a bayonet thrust, and the word is hammered and hammered. It comes frequently into the stories of their experiences that the heroes of the trenches relate to groups of officers in their quarters at night.

Teaching the Teachers.

They are devoting all their time now to the officers graduated from the officers' camps at Fort Sheridan and Camp Dodge who have been used to "get your man" instructions and similar phraseology. But they say they get new fire from their new teachers. "Kill him before he kills you" is frequently heard.

But the talk of the allied officers is not limited to the horrible side of the war. They tell little anecdotes that rival any of those told by any of the war veteran lecturers or writers, and they are the most popular group of men in the camp.

Exactly what they are teaching and how they are teaching it may not be told the public. Not all of it is secret or confidential, but division headquarters points out the difficulty in drawing the line between the old and the new in bayonet dueling, grenade throwing, field fortifications, "mopping up," machine guns and similar topics.

No Aid to Enemy.

Publishing all of what an accredited correspondent is permitted to see and hear would be equivalent to handing the enemy copies of the confidential manuals and instruction books of the allies.

Therefore, headquarters has asked that details be omitted. No objection was made to a statement that the battle scarred heroes are doing more to bring home the actual meaning of life in the trenches than could be accomplished for our new soldiers in any other way. The only regret expressed in connection with their presence here is that there are not more of them.

The big feature of the week end holiday was the football game between Camp Grant officers and the jackies' team from the Great Lakes Naval Training station, an account of which is published on the sporting page. A warm, sunny day brought thousands of visitors into camp. Thousands of men also went on leave to their homes. The colored men of the Three Hundred and Sixty-fifth infantry were allowed their first leaves.

U. S. Issues Call for 500 Chauffeurs to Aid Army

New York, Nov. 17.—A call for 500 chauffeurs for transport service in the quartermaster's corps was issued here today at the headquarters of the eastern department. The men will be used for service either in this country at cantonments or with forces abroad, it was announced. Applicants will be examined at receiving offices.

CHANGE NATIONAL GUARD OFFICERS.
Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—Brig. Gen. Edward Vollrath of the Ohio national guard was today assigned to command the Eighty-second infantry brigade in the Forty-first militia division. He had commanded the Fifty-sixth depot brigade. Brig. Gen. E. A. Wedgewood of the Utah national guard was relieved from duty with the Eighty-second infantry brigade and was attached to the Forty-first division.

LATE KIT BITS

Final Figures on Christmas Fund for Soldiers Add $72 to Total.

In completing a general summing up of the Christmas kit fund it is found necessary to publish an "addenda" list of TRIBUNE readers, most of whose contributions to the fund have come from a distance, and therefore too late to be included in the total as published several days ago.

In acknowledging these late and scattering "votes for a merry Christmas for the soldiers" it is necessary to recapitulate and announce that the final total is $23,543, the late contributions amounting to $72.

Here is the list of late arrivals:

Ida Peterson	$ 2
Pupils room 206, Willard school	2
Class 43, Friebel school	2
Mildred M. Black	1
Cora Tischafer	2
G. W. Lawton	10
Clara Sheriden	2
Mrs. M. W. Mercer	10
Victor Thrane	6
C. C. Bell	5
Mary Salman	2
Carrie Carroll	2
Carrie De Messim	6
Mrs. Walter Olders	2
Primary room, Swaney school, McNabb, Ill.	2
Joseph W. Woolfolk	10
M. L. McCane	2
Junior class, Lockport, Ill., High school	2
Total	$72
Previously acknowledged	$23,471
Grand total	$23,543

Although these contributions are a bit tardy, it has been found possible to add them to the fund and the kits they purchase will find their way to the front.

TRENCH EXPERTS PRAISE WORK OF HOUSTON BOYS

First Bayonet Class Pleases Foreign Instructors.

Camp Logan, Houston, Tex., Nov. 17.—The first class for bayonet experts has closed. The final exercises of the school were held this morning before the regimental and brigade commanders of the camp. The members of the classes were officers from the various regiments that engaged in trench work in actual warfare.

The French instructors at the camp here, as well as the commanders, expressed great satisfaction over the results.

Gunners Show Speed.

A short exhibition of machine gun work also was given at the divisional school of arms. This work consisted mostly of demonstrating the speed with which a gun can be taken apart and put together again. Finally, these men will be expected to take a gun apart and put it together when blindfolded. This training is invaluable for night work in the trenches.

The general court will sit on the first serious case of the encampment some time next week. It is the case of John Lacita, who is charged with murdering Private August W. Hedka of Company M of the old Sixth infantry. The murder was committed at the aviation field at Bellville, Ill., while the company was on guard duty there.

Capt. O'Connor Weds.

Another romance culminated in a wedding day. This time the man is an officer and the girl an old sweetheart from Chicago. The man is Capt. John J. O'Connor, regimental adjutant of the One Hundred and Eighth engineers, and the girl is Miss Grace Marie Barron of Chicago. Miss Barron is accompanied here by Mrs. J. G. Braun. The wedding took place tonight.

Cut in Tailors' Samples to Garb 67,000 Soldiers

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—More than 67,000 soldiers can be clothed with the material which will be saved by cutting the sizes of tailors' samples 21 per cent, and this has been arranged at conferences between the council of national defense, the National Wholesale Tailors' association, and many large cloth dealers. Nearly a quarter of a million yards of cloth heretofore used as samples will be devoted to clothing.

DECIDE AGAINST FORT SHERIDAN FOR THIRD CAMP

War Department Refuses to Alter Plans for Training.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—Fort Sheridan will lose its identity as an officers' training camp at the close of the second camp a week from Monday. The officers stationed at Fort Sheridan as instructors will be assigned to other posts. The student officers commissioned will be assigned to stations and then given furloughs to report Dec. 15 for duty.

In the last few days a volume of letters to the war department asked the continuance of Fort Sheridan as a training camp, but officials rejected these requests, holding to their previously announced determination of establishing the third officers' training camps at the various army camps.

Where Camps Will Be.

The third series of camps will open Jan. 5 and close April 18. There will be one each in every national army cantonment, including that at Rockford; one each in every national guard camp, including Camp Logan at Houston, where the Illinois men are training; one in each regular army division, wherever quartered, and in the regular army camps at Fort Bliss, Tex.; Fort Sam Houston, Tex., and Chickamauga, Ga., and one each in the Philippines, Hawaii, and Panama.

Ninety per cent of the men in these camps will come from the ranks. The other 10 per cent will come from the ranks of graduates and undergraduates of certain accredited schools who have had courses in military training under army officers.

The commanding generals at Camp Grant and the other camps and cantonments have been instructed to inform the men in these ranks that they are authorized to apply for admission to the school. The applications are to be submitted before Dec. 1. The company or other unit commanders will select not to exceed 10 per cent of the command.

Method of Selection.

Applications of the men thus chosen will be sent to the division commander, who will call a board of three regular army or three national guard officers to consider applications and designate men to attend the camps.

The 90 per cent of noncommissioned officers or privates taken from each camp to attend the officers' school to be held in that camp will be joined by a 10 per cent from the colleges and ranks of college graduates.

BLACK, WHITE, AND BLUE FLIES FROM LOOP BUILDING

Several unadulterated Americans rushed into THE TRIBUNE office yesterday and demanded an explanation for a black, white and blue flag which they had seen flying from a loop building.

"There's a flag over there with black stripes," quoth the first. "Maybe it's the German flag."

He might have been color blind, but when three others brought the same story an investigation was made. And the flag was black, white, and blue.

Another man rushed in.

"Look here," he cried. "What's the idea of the red flag beneath the American flag? Have the Bolsheviki captured Chicago?"

Sure enough, a red flag hung beneath the American flag.

The office girl solved the mystery. A consignment of flags received a short time ago by a certain flagmaking house had been dyed poorly. The red stripes would turn black when exposed in the air.

"And the red flag?—that's no flag—it's a piece of red bunting we're testing. See, it's already starting to turn black."

The red "flag" isn't there now.

CURSES U. S.; WHIPPED, JAILED.
Taylorville, Ill., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—John Rown, I. W. W., of Minneapolis, was whipped three times in three minutes and then jailed here today, after he had cursed the United States. When he was searched the police found a pistol and a long knife.

MANY POSTS ARE OPEN FOR THOSE NOW IN CAMPS

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—The war department today announced details of the plan of assigning the men at Fort Sheridan and the other officers' training camps when the second series of camps closes, on Nov. 27.

Of the 19,000 in these camps, men qualifying as officers and receiving commissions will be distributed as follows:

Six thousand five hundred officers to vacancies in infantry and field artillery regiments in the United States and France.

One thousand seven hundred to the signal reserve corps.

Six hundred to the ordnance reserve corps.

Two captains, first lieutenants and second lieutenants to each company of infantry of the regular army and national army in cantonments and camps in the United States.

Two captains, first lieutenants and second lieutenants to each battery of field artillery of the regular army and national army in camps in the United States.

All the training camps will be closed on Nov. 27, except the camp at Leon Springs, Tex.

It is estimated that approximately 17,000 of the men in training camps will receive commission.

Ellis Paul, a young motion picture star, will be the guest of honor. The speakers will be Carl J. Baer, vice president of the American Aviation corps, and State's Attorney Hadley of Wheaton.

BANKER DUBIA'S CASE GOES TO JURY TOMORROW

Harry A. Dubia, president of the defunct Industrial Savings bank, on trial before Judge Kickham Scanlan in the Criminal court on a charge of accepting deposits after the bank was insolvent, will probably learn his fate tomorrow, when the case is expected to go to the jury.

A number of character witnesses testified in Dubia's behalf yesterday, among them former Gov. Edward F. Dunne, Roger C. Sullivan, County Clerk Robert M. Sweitzer, Thomas Cusack, and D. F. Kelly, general manager of Mandel Brothers. Mr. Dunne and Mr. Sullivan said they had known Dubia for twenty years.

Dubia, replying to questions of the prosecuting attorneys, placed the value of the American Compound Door company plant at $300,000 and the Chicago Dry Kiln company plant at $250,000. The state is contending that the valuations placed by Dubia upon the properties are much too high.

SUSPECT SPIES IN ARMY CAMP

Battle Creek, Mich., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Maj. Gen. Dickman, commanding the Eighty-fifth division of the new national army, voiced the belief today that there are spies at Camp Custer—possibly some of them are in Uncle Sam's uniform. He has authorized the increase of guards.

Arrest of Jerrold Menselman, a camp workman, on a charge of attempting to wreck trains is regarded as a forerunner of other arrests to follow.

There are Austrian and even German selects at camp, especially from Wisconsin, but they all seem willing to serve Uncle Sam. In fact, 100,000-Acre Land Sale!

Beautiful Cloverland Farms

Owned by S. Crawford & Sons, Cedar River, Menominee County, Mich.

The Most Wonderful Portion of God's Creative Work

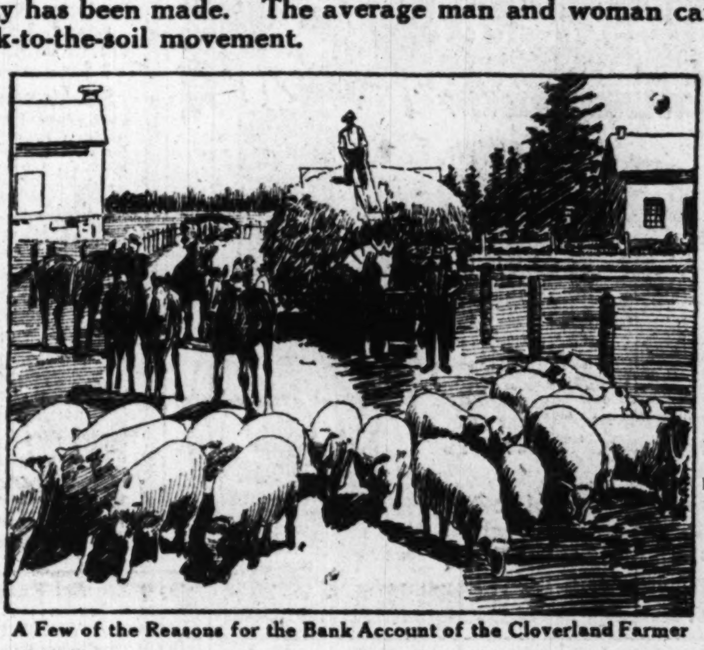
CLOVERLAND FARMS give you an opportunity to acquire at small terms and prices your ideal summer home on famous Green Bay or that piece of land in the country so many of us look forward to, located only nine hours from Chicago. Never again will Upper Peninsula farm lands be offered at present low prices and terms.

The Great Drive is on for Happy Homes and Prosperous Farms in the Green Empire

One month from the date that S. Crawford & Sons' beautiful Cloverland Farms tract was placed on the market a record sale of nearly $100,000 worth of this property has been made. The average man and woman cannot begin to appreciate the tremendous momentum attained by the back-to-the-soil movement.

Think what the position of the farmer is today over what it was a few years ago, and it is no wonder. Today, when millions of men have been enrolled in the armies and navies of the world, with the great duty of feeding them falling chiefly upon the rural army of this country, you will better understand the voice of our food administrator when the cry for greater production of food necessities is heard and begin to appreciate that there is sufficient reason for this back-to-the-soil march of thousands.

The tiller of the soil commands a mighty respect under the present conditions, and, due to the high prices of all foodstuffs, indeed makes the farmer of today the most happy and prosperous of workers. Farm lands in Illinois, Iowa and other states are not found in sufficient quantities to satisfy the demand. There is a hungry market for them, even at prices running from $200 up to $400 an acre, and it is well known that the soil on many of these farms is not of the best.



A Few of the Reasons for the Bank Account of the Cloverland Farmer

If they can produce profits for the intelligent farmer at these prices, imagine, if you can—you seeker of land—what the rich virgin soil of Cloverland will produce in the way of wealth. Soil that has grown hardwood timber to the size and quality of that taken out of this rich country will, without intensive farming methods, produce abundant crops of all kinds.

It is a proven fact that Cloverland produces more abundant crops than any other section of the State of Michigan, and the equal of the best soil in the country; and that, bear in mind, without the extensive preparation and fertilization resorted to in the working of land costing you ten tiems the investment that a farm in Cloverland necessitates.

Cloverland Has Never Known a Crop Failure

not being subject to the killing frosts so many sections of our country suffer from, and never knowing droughts, cyclones or blizzards. You have a moderate, finely tempered climate, which makes this country an ideal place to live in. ADD TO THIS THE FOLLOWING FACTS:

1—You have wonderfully productive soil.

2—You have the best rail transportation and excellent shipping facilities with lowest rates.

3—You have unexcelled market facilities, being only nine hours' ride by fast freight from Chicago, the great market of the Middle West, and within ten hours' ride of over 10,000,000 people. These facts combined make Cloverland Farms easily and by far the best land buy of recent years, and presents to prospective farm buyers and farm renters throughout the country the finest kind of an opportunity to own a good farm in a healthful climate and be independent.

A word of explanation that touches on S. Crawford & Sons who own splendid tract and are now not only offering a great opportunity to hundreds future prosperous farmers, but who most of all extend to you their enthusiastic co-operation in a way to guarantee success to the man who has but a small amount of cash to start with, their main aim and object being to develop this country of wonderful possibilities and give to the people the abundant harvests that the soil of Cloverland finds it easy to produce. S. Crawford & Sons are not real estate operators, but are men who have been in intimate contact with the progress of Menominee County for the past twenty years, deciding they could do their country a great good by offering to hungry land buyers their fine tract. They decided to place it on the market and deal direct with the buyers themselves. In dealing this way directly with the owners in the purchase of a farm, you are saving yourself money and incidentally increasing the profits on your buy.

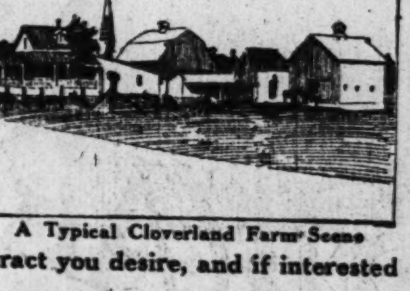
A few reasons why Cloverland Farms is a good buy: Located within 15 miles from the famous Door County, Wisconsin, the banner county of the world for the production of cherries and apples, where improved land sells up to $500.00 an acre. We have everything that makes Door County great, and the only reason that Cloverland in Menominee County, the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, is not spoken of in the same terms, is the fact that the demand for land has only at the present time made development necessary.

Menominee County is one of the most productive sugar beet districts in the United States, having the most completely equipped sugar beet refinery in the country. Twenty to twenty-five tons per acre is a common yield, and sugar beets selling form $6 to $7 a ton make this a very profitable crop. Potatoes also grow abundantly, and they possess more nutritious qualities and are better keepers than those raised in any part of the country. Cloverland farmers harvest from 300 to 400 bushels per acre. Not only many are grown on the stalk, but they also grow very large. One has only to view some farmer's field when harvested to appreciate how much praise we should give to the great and wise Creator, who has favored Cloverland with such wonderful productive soil.

Registered Holsteins Among the Elms

This Is the Opportunity You Have Waited For

And we want to extend an invitation to farm renters throughout the country who are desirous of owning their own farm and home and getting ahead in life, and to farm owners who have sons and daughters who are unable to buy high-priced farm lands in their own neighborhood, and especially for parents in the city working on a salary and who desire to go back to the soil, to health, happiness, independence and prosperity, to take advantage of our excursions to Cloverland Farms and investigate our offer of Cloverland farm lands at eleven dollars an acre and up, sold on terms of 10% down, 1% a month, no interest the first year and no taxes for five years to the actual settler.



A Typical Cloverland Farm Scene

Full details will gladly be given on how to buy any size farm tract you desire, and if interested we will arrange for you to see the land and choose for yourself.

CLOVERLAND FARMS—The ideal dairy and stock section of the Upper Peninsula, in the State of Michigan, is an added reason why Cloverland Farms will be sold quickly, as cows, beef cattle, sheep, goats and hogs are real money makers today and will continue so for many years to come. Clover, the best pasturage possible, grows everywhere in the greatest profusion.

Here Is Sufficient Proof that we do not overestimate Cloverland as a grazing and dairy section, given in the words of the Hon. Frank G. Hagenbarth of Salt Lake City, Utah, president of the National Wool Growers' Association of the U. S., an eminent authority on the subject; also the representative of the Wool Growers' Association on the United States Live Stock Industry Committee of the Government. "Cloverland may come to be, as the Lord intended it should, the greatest grazing and dairy section of the United States, if not of the whole world."

Send in the coupon and we will gladly furnish descriptive matter on how to own a fine farm in a healthful climate and be independent. Send in coupon and do it at once.

CITY FIREMAN ARRESTED AS BOX CAR THIEF

Railroad Towerman and Telegraph Operator Also Held.

Edward Walters, a city fireman attached to engine company No. 8, is under arrest in the Cragin police station accused of being the head of a gang of box car thieves who are believed to have stolen more than $100,000 in goods from cars in the western railroad yards.

Also under arrest are Fred Huehn, a towerman for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, and Charles Laue, a telegraph operator for the same railroad. The police are seeking William Weber of 4509 Montana avenue, and W. Fredericks, whose address is not known.

Loaded Automobile.

The arrests followed the discovery of a loaded automobile alongside some cars near Kostner avenue and Bloomingdale road. Policeman Simon Foley was on the point of inquiring why the car carried neither lights nor license number. Huehn, who seemingly was in charge of the car, admitted he was loading goods from a car, but said he was employed by a city fireman.

Foley attempted to take Huehn and the automobile to the station and a fight followed. While they were scuffling Laue, who was hidden near by, managed to escape. Foley called for help, and while he was waiting for the patrol wagon Walters came along in citizen's clothes. He tried to assure the policeman that everything was "all right," and produced his fireman's badge in support of this. Then he hurriedly departed. But Foley had the number of the badge.

Confession Reported.

Once in the station Huehn is reported to have made a complete confession in which he implicated the others mentioned. By means of the badge number Walters was arrested and is said to have made a statement.

Huehn is said to have told Lieut. Bowler they had been stealing regularly from cars and had established a route over which they sold goods each day. He said they stole whisky, sugar, boots and shoes, and tea and coffee. When he was arrested Huehn had three cases of whisky in his car. It also was found the car had been stolen from Louis Schlesinger of 1744 West Division street.

New Hostile Lie Hits Red Cross and Y. M. C. A.

Another form of anti-American propaganda is being employed and all patriotic citizens are asked to disregard it. Rumors are being spread that only 2 per cent of the money contributed to the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. is used for the direct benefit of the soldiers and that more than 90 per cent is wasted in large salaries.

104,764 PERSONS GIVE $2,794,916 TO Y. M. C. A. FUND

Plan to Pass Quota in the Final Rush Tomorrow.

At the close of business yesterday the country was $8,000,000 under the goal in the $35,000,000 drive for the army Y. M. C. A. The campaign will close tomorrow at midnight.

In Chicago, only $205,000 remains to be collected of the $3,000,000 quota. Leaders of the movement in Chicago are confident that when the workers gather tomorrow night for the last time at the Hotel La Salle the goal will be reached.

The country has been divided into six divisions corresponding with the six departments of the army, and the Central department, which includes Chicago, has passed its quota by nearly $400,000. It is leading the country in the amount of contributions obtained, although the quota for the Eastern department, which includes New York, is $3,000,000 more than the Central department's quota.

Nation Wide Returns.

Three of the six divisions have passed their quotas and are still working to increase their totals. The following table indicates the results throughout the country:

Department.	Quota.	Contributions.
Central	$12,500,000	$12,897,055
Eastern	15,500,000	12,626,811
Northeastern	3,500,000	3,690,394
Western	1,250,000	1,181,400
Southeastern	1,500,000	693,608
Southern	750,000	808,000
Totals	$35,000,000	$31,897,268

Already more than 100,000 persons in Chicago and its suburbs have contributed to the fund.

$2,794,916 Total Recorded.

James B. Forgan, chairman of the ways and means committee for the Chicago campaign, announced at yesterday's meeting that the day's returns totaled $332,651, bringing the total for the campaign to $2,794,916. Chicago stands just $205,189 short of its goal, with two more days left.

So far 104,764 persons have contributed.

In the central division Illinois has passed Ohio by a good margin. Up to Friday at midnight Ohio had been leading.

The total in the district was $12,300,982, or more than one-third of the total for the country, which is $35,000,000.

The community teams of Chicago and suburbs hit its high mark for the campaign yesterday with a total of 27,576 subscriptions for $133,738.

Score of Teams.

The teams reported the following scores for the twenty-four hours preceding yesterday's meeting:

	Subscriptions.	Contributions.
North shore suburbs	3,070	$47,555
North side	1,473	3,402
Lake shore strip	7,450	21,555
South side	1,280	7,247
South Chicago	6,605	18,640
Englewood	849	8,010
West side	3,646	12,717
Northwest side	2,198	7,328
Oak Park and River Forest	416	8,329
Burlington suburbs	525	3,374

In general subscriptions, a total of $33,450 was announced. Of that amount there was one contribution of $25,000 and one of $5,000, both made anonymously. The women's committee reported twenty-one subscriptions for a total of $5,665.

Within a few dollars of $150,000 was reported by the trade teams.

Lieut. Col. Charles G. Dawes, who is on Gen. Pershing's staff, sent the following cablegram to L. Wilbur Messer of the Chicago Y. M. C. A.:

"Cannot overstate importance to American army, especially during the winter months, of work being done by the Y. M. C. A."

The bazaar which will be given by the woman's committee of the Y. M. C. A. drive for funds for work among soldiers in camp and at the front will be held at the Art institute on Friday of this week instead of at the Blackstone hotel, as originally planned. There will be flowers for sale, and the institute will be open to the public on that day on account of the sale.

Mrs. J. J. Mitchell, chairman of the woman's committee of the drive, will have charge of the sale, which will be a flower bazaar, and will be assisted by Mrs. John A. Spoor, Mrs. Henry S. Robbins, Mrs. William J. Chalmers, Mrs. Hamilton McCormick, Mrs. Arthur Ryerson, Mrs. C. Morse Ely, and Mrs. C. K. Pomeroy. The sale will begin at 11 o'clock and continue all day

Over $1,100 for Y. M. C. A. Netted by Band Parade

The Chicago Band association yesterday turned over to Chairman Forgan of the Y. M. C. A. fund committee a check for $1,107.08, the amount collected during the parade of the Chicago band. "This check represents the collection of 7,232 pieces of money," said Conductor Weil, "ranging from pennies to ten dollar bills."

$15 Marvelous Phonographs
Model A, Table Phonograph, is the marvel of the age. It is not a toy, but a real musical instrument constructed on a new plan, with a built-in, vibrant, wood tone chamber, reproducing music with a wonderful, full, rich, clear tone. Nothing like it has ever before been offered at its price. We cannot describe it—you must hear it play. Plays all makes of Disc Records—just the same as the big machines.

ALDERMEN VOTE TO STOP DANCING IN ALL CABARETS

Brewers' Plan Amended to Limit Programs to Music.

Dancing in cabarets was doomed yesterday by the city council license committee, which is considering legislation licensing all places where entertainment is given in connection with the sale of liquor.

Ald. James B. Bowler, a member of the committee, led a successful fight to bring about a modification of the demands made by the brewers' association for the absolute elimination of cabarets in all places where intoxicants are served.

The city law department gave an opinion that while the brewers' ordinance was valid, it would not operate against cabarets, as it prohibited cabarets instead of seeking to regulate the sale of liquor in such places.

Bowler's Amendment.

Ald. Bowler's proposition, which was adopted by the committee and incorporated in the brewers' measure, provides for the following:

No liquor shall be sold in any place which permits other than orchestral and vocal entertainment, skating, dancing and all other adjuncts of cabarets being barred.

Special platforms for orchestras and entertainers to be provided.

Annual license fees of from $250 to $1,000 shall be charged, in addition to a bond for double these amounts that the provisions of the ordinance will be lived up to.

Special Bars Allowed.

Special bar permits are not interfered with by the Bowler measure. This protects picnics and entertainments given by the United Societies and other bona fide organizations.

The committee will meet again tomorrow morning to consider the Bowler measure. It was predicted yesterday that it will be recommended to the council tomorrow afternoon.

Regulation of all saloon and liquor licenses by a commission is to be proposed to the council tomorrow by Ald. an Horne. He will introduce an ordinance in the council asking for the appointment of a commission of three members to have charge of all liquor license matters. The ordinance provides that the members shall be paid $1,000 each a year, and that they shall be appointed by the mayor.

The Horne proposition is patterned after the Boston liquor commission.

BARRETT AGAIN IS SUED BY A FORMER PUPIL

Charles R. Barrett, president of the Barrett Institution of Shorthand and Typewriting, 22 West Monroe street, was made a defendant in a $25,000 damage suit filed in the Superior court yesterday by Mrs. Eva Strong. According to Mrs. Strong's attorneys, Barrett is alleged to have taken undue liberties with the plaintiff when she was a pupil in his school. This is the second action of the same nature filed against Mr. Barrett this week. Virginia Van [illegible] was the other plaintiff.

"It's an attempt to ruin my business and reputation," said Mr. Barrett last night. "These two girls attended my school in 1914 and they were both expelled. If they were sincere in their allegations, why did they not bring the suits sooner—over two years have elapsed since the alleged indiscretion happened?"

Efforts to communicate with Mrs. Strong proved futile last night.

Henry L. Hertz, Age 70, to Be Guest at Dinner

Henry L. Hertz, a pioneer Chicagoan, will celebrate his seventieth birthday anniversary today as the guest of honor at a dinner to be given at the Hotel Atlantic. He was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1847, and came to Chicago in 1869.

He started here as clerk in a banking house. Then he became teller in the Commercial Loan company bank and in 1872 was appointed clerk in the recorder's office. From 1899 to 1901 he was chief clerk of the board of review.

President McKinley appointed him collector of internal revenue in 1901. He was reappointed to the position by President Roosevelt and served until 1910.

Federal Court Decision Brings Freedom to 33

Mr. Clyne's action was given an official O. K. by Judge Carpenter, who said he was acting on orders from Attorney General Gregory.

EAST ST. LOUIS VOTE FRAUDS PERIL LEADERS

Big Politicians Face Indictment as Result of Brundage Inquiry.

Many of the leading white politicians of East St. Louis, Ill., including executives of that city, are face to face with criminal prosecution in connection with election frauds there last fall, it was learned yesterday. Investigation of the details of a confession obtained by Attorney General Edward J. Brundage from Le Roy Bundy, a colored dentist of East St. Louis, is expected to reveal evidence that will form the basis for the state's cases.

Bundy is in jail in Belleville, Ill., in connection with the recent race riots at East St. Louis. Attorney General Brundage admitted last night Bundy had "told certain things" and that a large force of investigators is working with three of his assistants to corroborate the details of election frauds disclosed by Bundy.

Confession Is Verbal.

Mr. Brundage said:

"Bundy has told us certain things. I understand investigation has proved he told the truth. We are certain he knows a lot more. So far his confession has been purely verbal. We expect him to tell us more. He is making overtures for consideration in connection with the present race riot prosecution I am conducting. I believe we will obtain a detailed written confession from him."

"How will a confession of past vote frauds affect Bundy in the present race riot case?" the attorney general was asked.

"The race riots were the outgrowth of a condition—a cause. That cause was misgovernment. Election frauds are responsible for the misgovernment. If we would stop a cankerous condition we must attack its roots. Bundy may possibly be given consideration."

"Big Politicians" Involved.

Mr. Brundage intimated the investigation is already under full sway. He refused to name the men who may be prosecuted, but intimated "all the big white politicians of East St. Louis" may be named in indictments. He admitted he is in constant touch from his office at Springfield with the men who are conducting the inquiry. These are Assistant Attorneys General C. W. Middlekauff, Jesse Farmer, and Roy Wood.

It was indicated last night that the plan of the attorney general is to obtain absolute evidence of fraud and corruption before making a single move against any one. This is to ward off the chances of the guilty ones' "covering up," it is said.

STELK DENIES WISH TO RULE CHARITY BODY

Judge Stelk of the Court of Domestic Relations yesterday replied to the statement of Eugene T. Lies of the United Charities denying any ambition to dominate the charitable organization and also explaining that he saw no need for a conference of social workers as suggested.

"My records will show that I have committed 234 more persons to the house of correction than any of my predecessors in the same length of time," says the judge in describing his friendship for the United Charities. "Among them were a number who had deliberately imposed upon the charities. The fact that I have been somewhat practical is shown by the increase in collections. The increase in the last eleven months has been $37,965.71.

"Mr. Lies asks whether I encourage desertion. If he had spent a half day in my court and examined into the statistics he would not ask such a question. The fact is I have been accused of being too severe with men who neglect work and fail to take care of their families."

Alderman Threatened by Deputy with Gun, He Says

Ald. Stanley Adamkiewicz of the Seventeenth ward complained to Sheriff Traeger yesterday that Deputy Sheriff Joseph Pionke threatened his life last night while engaged in a controversy. He said that the deputy was under the influence of liquor and that his pistol was taken from him after he flourished it at the alderman. According to the alderman, he, Pionke, and Phillip Weyna were discussing the affairs of the Polish Union Fraternal association in Weyna's place of business, 1020 Milwaukee avenue. The alderman said that a man rushed between them and wrested the revolver from the deputy sheriff.

Nightly Thefts for Three Months Confessed by Six

Wallace Grosch, Albert Franklin, and his brother, "Red" Franklin; Herman Winkler, John Lundgren, and Leo Horton, who were arrested in the vicinity of Monroe and Robey streets, confessed yesterday to the Austin police they have committed three and four robberies nightly in the last three months. All have been identified.

A dozen ducks and chickens, two sacks of potatoes, and four onions embraced the plunder taken by automobile bandits from 923 Fulton street yesterday.

AUGUSTE RODIN, NOTED FRENCH SCULPTOR, DIES

Victor in Fight Against Poverty and Ridicule Expires at 77.

PARIS, Nov. 17.—Auguste Rodin, France's great sculptor, died early today. The 77 year old sculptor had been ill for only a brief time of congestion of the lungs.

M. Rodin died in his villa at Meudon in the outskirts of Paris. Had he lived, M. Rodin would have been elected a member of the Academy of Fine Arts by almost unanimous vote a week from today.

FIFTY YEARS' STRUGGLE.

Auguste Rodin struggled fifty years against poverty, and abuse, and ridicule for his unconventional ideas before he achieved celebrity as one of the most famous sculptors of the world.

When finally recognized, M. Rodin was hailed by his admirers as "the Michael Angelo of the modern world."

Born in Paris in 1840 of wretchedly poor parents, he was first heard of in 1864, when, after a short time spent in studying under Barye, he sent his mask, "The Man with the Broken Nose," to the salon. It was refused, and he spent the next six years in drudgery.

His second attempt to gain recognition at the Paris salon was humiliating. He submitted, in 1877, "The Age of Bronze," only to have it rejected and to have himself accused of casting it from life instead of creating an original work.

It was not until 1880, after the exhibition of his "St. John the Baptist," that the tide began to turn in his favor.

Controversy Over Monument.

From then on he created a number of notable works, among them his "Victor Hugo," "The Burgesses of Calais," and his statue of "Balzac," the latter being received with almost universal jest and jibe.

For years after the Balzac controversy, Rodin devoted himself to a great decorative composition some twenty feet high, "The Portal of Hell," for the Museum of Decorative Arts.

A bronze bust of "La France" by Rodin was presented to the United States by the people of France during the tercentenary celebration of the discovery of Lake Champlain, and has since been mounted on a monument to Champlain at Crown Point, N. Y.

Rodin in his later life received many honors. Upon the death of Whistler he succeeded as president of the International Society of Painters, Sculptors, and Gravers.

P. J. Gibbons, Former Police Captain, Run Over

Former Police Capt. P. J. Gibbons was injured yesterday by an automobile truck driven by Francis Eschen of the South Suburban Motor Express company. The accident occurred on Clark street, near Randolph.

He is believed to be suffering from scalp wounds, a fractured rib, and other injuries. Eschen was held at the central station.

Gibbons is 67 years old, a bachelor, and lives with his sister at 5253 Lakewood avenue. He resigned from the police department in September, 1915. He was captain of the central station for eighteen years.

FOR thirty-four years Martin Larson has been making boots and shoes to-measure for people all over the country. Comfort, style, service and foot health is the slogan which has made him Chicago's Leading Shoe Specialist.

Today, Martin Larson is making boots and shoes not only for civilian activity but for those engaged in the world's great conflict. Martin Larson's boots and shoes are now being worn by hundreds of our boys "over there." They have been serving under extreme conditions. It is a war where extra efficiency in footwear has stood out and where any flaw in workmanship and materials has quickly uncovered itself—but re-orders are continually coming in.

Martin Larson Military Boots Are Supreme in the Estimation of U. S. Officers

Martin Larson anticipated the demand for real leather boots and shoes when war broke out and purchased large stocks of the best selected leathers. This coupled with the workmanship and skill of Martin Larson gives you an opportunity to be fitted with the best dress and service boots and shoes it is possible to make—and on short notice.

You men in training at Fort Sheridan and other training camps—commissioned officers at the various army posts and cantonments—now is the time to think of your feet!

Learn quickly what the French and English have learned—that one of the greatest boons on the march, in the camp and in the trench—are feet fitted with the best boots and shoes you can get.

Let Martin Larson Measure You for a Pair of Boots or Shoes

Let him give you his personal attention. Let him select leather—genuine A1 quality stuff—that will pass inspection anywhere. Right now Martin Larson is equipped to turn out 1,000 pairs of army officers' boots and shoes within the next two weeks.

Fort Sheridan men and others who expect a commission can come in and leave their measurements. When you receive your commission, phone Martin Larson (Franklin 1992) to go ahead and make them. Remember, YOU ARE UNDER NO OBLIGATION. You save time when most needed and avoid the rush. If you cannot call, send Martin Larson your measurements by mail.

Send Martin Larson Your Order by Mail

For those men who find it impossible to come here to be measured in person, Martin Larson has inaugurated a special service by mail. On the right is a diagram of a boot showing the measurements necessary for him to make up your boots or shoes. Just fill out the coupon in the lower left hand corner, tear out and mail to Martin Larson with your order.

ORDER TODAY TO AVOID THE RUSH LATER!

THE IDEAL GIFT

Consider Martin Larson's boots and Shoes as a suggestion for a Christmas Gift. Think of the pleasure and satisfaction that is contained in a pair of Martin Larson's boots or shoes. Nothing will please your man in service better. Send him the coupon and sketch showing how to take measurements and have him fill them out. Then send it to Martin Larson with your order.

OHIO STATE BEATS ILLINOIS FOR TITLE

GOPHERS SWAT MAROONS, 33-0, BEFORE 16,000

Stagg's Men Crushed by Attack of the Northmen.

BY ALBON HOLDEN.

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—There was a football game played in Minneapolis today by the University of Minnesota eleven. The University of Chicago team and 16,000 spectators saw the exhibition. After it was all over the scoreboard boy was painting, Minnesota, 33; Chicago, 0.

The old pot of dope was tipped over and the beans spilled again. Critics up this way are still staggering under the shock. Before the affair started all of the wise birds in the hotels downtown were betting on Chicago, and only a few chauvinistic Gopher students cared to put up any of their fall allowances. Minnesota had been beaten 10 to 7 by Wisconsin and seemed to be doomed to a season of reverses.

Story of Last Two Years.

But the story of 1915 and 1916 was written over again. In those seasons the Gophers played one bad game, then finished with a championship drive. The weird reversal of form of the Gophers has every Minnesota adherent wondering what is the jinx that once each season stacks the cards against Dr. Williams' eleven.

Fans who journeyed to Madison two weeks ago to see the Maroon and Gold eleven trimmed, 10 to 7, by the Badgers, will tell you that Williams murdered all of his men on the way home and went out and got a new bunch of athletes. You cannot tell any of them that the same eleven men who starred in the track meet on Northrop field today were the same that put up such a slipshod game against Wisconsin.

Hauser and Ecklund Star.

Up in these parts the fans have been trained to watch the linemen. When some Gopher back would tear off fifteen yards the fans would exclaim, "Look, Hauser knocked down three men," or "That boy Ecklund opened a hole wide enough for a wagon to drive through." And the truth of the whole matter was that the story of the game could be written in two names—Capt. George Hauser and Con Ecklund.

The Gophers have had star linemen in past seasons, but never did any pair of tackles sweep a field so clean of tacklers as this pair. When the Gophers' backs started to move it seemed as if a barrage from artillery wiped the whole Chicago team off the scene.

Eleven Men in Each Play.

Little Arntson, the quarter back, was hitting the line for ten yards at a smash, and Kingsley, the full back, who is so tall that he looks over Higgins' head, was running the ends. Kingsley gallops like a man on stilts, but it made no difference whether Gopher backs ran or walked, for the Maroons had to knock down ten other men before they could touch the man with the ball.

The Gophers punted only two or three times. They didn't have to. Every time Minnesota needed a few yards for a first down Arntson took the ball himself and started out for the end. Ahead of him waded Hauser, Ecklund, Schroeder, Flinn, Kingsley, and all the rest of them. When this avalanche of Gophers hit Brelos and Jackson on one end or MacDonald and Mellin on the other flank the little gang of Midway fans held their breath, but not because they were afraid that Arntson was going to gain ten or fifteen yards, but for fear that Brelos or Jackson or some Maroon might never live to tell what had hit him.

Not a Maroon First Down.

Not once in the game did Chicago make first down. That tells the story of the world of difference between the two teams. Quarterback Blocki tried about everything he could think of for his three backs, but it simply was time wasted. After the score began to roll up the Maroons attempted the forward pass stuff, but could not complete a single effort. Not once did Chicago possess the ball in the Gopher half of the field.

When the band stood up to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at the kickoff, the Minnesota rooters were sad because there was no Shorty Long at quarter back, no Pudge Wyman to shoot the passes, no galloping Joe Sprafka, and only Ecklund, Hauser, and Flinn left of the great line of last year. There were cheers for the eighteen of the twenty-two letter men of the 1916 team who are in khaki.

Before the massacre had been on for five minutes there was another Long in Arntson, a fine passer in Kingsley, and about as sweet an imitation of Sprafka as the west will see this year in a sophomore named Paul Carroll. This newcomer dashed outside, inside, over, and under the Chicago guards and tackles for five and six yards at a thrust.

Stopped Like a Dead Man.

Chicago received the initial kickoff and Rouse came back about six yards. On the first play Elton stopped just where he started from. Then Higgins tried a buck and did not gain an inch.

BRIGGS

GRID AIR RAID BY BERRY LICKS MICHIGAN, 16-0

BY T. D. RICHTER.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Michigan's powerful team came out of the west this afternoon with a clean record and with every expectation of winning, but save for a few minutes early in the game it was completely outplayed and bewildered by the sturdiness of Penn's stand and by the power of its attack. The victory went to Penn by a score of 16 to 0.

Howard Berry, marvelous full back of the Red and Blue, gave the big crowd of more than 20,000 spectators an exhibition of field goal kicking and all round play that they will long remember. Playing in his last big game, for he will leave soon for military service, Berry kicked three goals from the field in five attempts, punted with remarkable length and accuracy, tackled hard and surely, and interfered for all his teammates.

Cleary Scores Touchdown.

Penn also contributed a touchdown through the aggressivenes of Cleary, its biggest lineman. Cleary dashed through the Michigan line and blocked Weiman's kick on the Michigan twenty yard line, following it over the goal line for a touchdown.

Michigan was never in the game after the first period. In that quarter the play was almost even. Michigan managed to make two first downs and gain forty-five yards from scrimmage, against fifty-three for the Quakers. After that Michigan gained only a paltry twenty-nine yards in the whole game, and never again made a first down.

In the second half Michigan came out without life or snap, an apparently beaten team, and during the third and fourth periods succeeded in gaining only seven yards from scrimmage.

Yost's Open Plays Fail.

Michigan found its vaunted open plays broken on the rock of a good Penn defense. All told, the westerners hurled eight passes, and they were of all varieties, but not a single pass worked successfully. Penn smothered every effort. Penn's forward passes were not effective, either, but the Quakers had a substitute in a hard driving attack, which, coupled with Berry's punting and field goal kicking, was enough to turn the tide of victory.

The turning point of the game came at the start of the second period. On a kick Straus, the brilliant Penn back, and Weston, Michigan's brilliant quarter back, were caught fighting, and both were banished from the field. Both teams were equally weakened, but Penn turned in and fought all the harder to overcome the handicap, while Michigan lost all its power on the offense and much of its aggressiveness.

Quakers Make One Shift.

Penn did not make a change except for the disqualification until just at the close of the game, when the battered Bert Bell, with his shoulder strapped to his side, left the field.

Berry's field goals were remarkable in that they were made when the need was greatest and either from long distances or at hard angles. His first field goal was straight in front of the posts, but was made at a distance of thirty yards. The next went thirty-seven yards and was at a hard angle. The last traveled twenty yards.

Weather conditions were perfect, with clear sky, a cold snap in the air, and little wind. The crowd was the best of the season. Michigan brought a big delegation and also had the support of its band and student delegation from the United States hospital camp at Allentown.

In the Wake of the News
By RING W. LARDNER

A PRAYER.

("The Housewives' league met at the Woman's club yesterday and doomed the doughnut as requiring an unpatroitic amount of fat to make it."—News item.)

Woman, spare that doughnut!
Revoke thy cruel decree!
*Let tarts and cookies go,nut,
But leave that fried cake be!
It's been my choice of eats
Since I was just a mite,
So cut out bread and meats,
But save my favor-ight.

OH RING?
YES'M!

That old, familiar smell
Of sugar, spice, and lard,
Sweeter than asphodel—
Wouldst have such fragrance barred!
Woman, forbear thy stroke!
I beg of thee, think twice!
This is no idle joke.
Be nice to me, be nice!

When a big, healthy boy
I downed a fresh fried mess,
Nor e'en forgot the joy
In subsequent distress.
The appetite's still here;
'Twill never, never cease.
Forgive this foolish tear—
But let me gorge in peace!

What if it does take fat!
Hundreds of victuals do.

Pie—hast thou thought of that?
French fried potatoes, too?
Fritters of different kinds,
Banana (Ugh!) and pear?
'Raus mit 'em all! Who minds!
But doughnuts—Don't you dare!

For years I sought in vain
A girl who knew the trick.
Mag's were a source of pain;
Bertha's were like a brick;
Minnie's were salt as tears;
Signe's were flavor shy.
In vain I sought for years;
For years in vain sought I.

PACK UP! YOUR DOUGHNUTS LACK FLAVOR!

And then, a month ago,
Lizzie, the new one, tried;
Lizzie made doughnuts, Oh,
How wonderfully fried!
How heavenly to smell!
How exquisite to bite!
Lizzie can make 'em swell.
Lizzie can make 'em right.

Woman, spare that doughnut!
Revoke thy cruel decree!
*Let tarts and cookies go,nut,
But leave that fried cake be!
Thou'rt kind in lots of things;
Thou'rt noble, thou'rt a thinker,
If thou'rt a friend of Ring's,
Kindly lay off that sinker!

*Roetic necessity.

PLAYER HIT ON HEAD WITH BRICK

Oberlin, O., Nov. 17.—As a result of a free for all fight which followed the football game here today between Oberlin High school and University school of Cleveland, Coach Briggs and Full Back Horton of the University team were badly injured. Briggs was struck on the head with a brick and rendered unconscious. Horton was struck on the head with an iron bar. Both men were taken to Cleveland tonight, suffering severe injuries.

An argument over a decision during the game was resumed by both teams after the game. Spectators mixed in and a general fight followed.

Two Oberlin Negroes are being held by the police in connection with the fight.

Camp Sherman Victor Before a $60,000 Crowd

Cincinnati, O., Nov. 17.—Camp Sherman's all-star soldier team today defeated Camp Sheridan 13 to 0, playing before a $60,000 crowd. The money goes to Camp Sherman's emergency fund. Camp Sheridan's team had recruited and drilled since Monday only.

BOARD OF TRADE AUCTION SALE FOR CAMP GRID SEATS

Chicago will enjoy the novelty of an auction at the board of trade at 2:30 o'clock Friday, when choice boxes for the Camp Grant-Camp Custer football game at Stagg field Dec. 1 will be put up to the highest bidder.

Cincinnati, conducting a similar auction for the choice of boxes for its intercamp game won yesterday by Camp Sherman realized more than $34,000 on the auctioned seats. This amount was added to the general ticket receipts, going to the credit of the company funds and athletic equipment funds of the two camps at Cincinnati.

Since the seat sale opened in Chicago the insistent demand for boxes has been such that the local committee, of which Fred W. Upham is chairman and Emil C. Wetten vice chairman, decided on an auction as the best means of playing no favorites.

The center boxes on the west side, or Illinois stand, have been reserved for the commanding general of Camp Grant and for Gov. Frank O. Lowden. The balance may be put up to the highest bidder, with $100 the minimum figure. Reserved seats sell from $2 to $5.

Lewis Omer, civilian sports director at Camp Grant, wants to fill for each company a standard rifle box, 6x8x2 feet, with the following athletic goods: Ten sets of boxing gloves, one dozen baseballs, six bats, catcher's mask, catcher's mitt, first baseman's glove, six indoor balls, four indoor bats, two medicine balls, four sets of quoits, three soccer footballs, three volleyballs, three nets, one-half dozen extra bladders, patching outfit, two American Rugby balls, extra laces, lacing needles, sewing threads, rule books, and inflating pump.

This outfit costs at retail over $200, but the camp is getting a special price of approximately $135. There are over 100 companies.

JACKIES DEFEAT CAMP GRANT MEN ON GRIDIRON, 9-6

BY PARKE BROWN.

Rockford, Ill., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—The team work of the jackies from Great Lakes defeated the individual stars of the Camp Grant officers' team today, 9 to 6.

The victory was squarely earned, for the jackies made the only touchdown of the game. Their other points came from a place kick by Allen, former Illinois university freshman. The Camp Grant score was made up by two drop kicks by Shiverick.

In addition the jackies kept the ball in the army's territory most of the time. Here, also, Shiverick's kicking was of great value. He kicked out of danger repeatedly.

Thrill at Finish.

The big thrill of the game came in the last three minutes of play. Left Half Johnson of Great Lakes went around the end as far as the goal line at the corner of the field. He was over, it appeared, when he fumbled the ball. Shiverick punted out of danger, it was thought, but on the next play Johnson again took the ball and this time skirted right end from his own twenty-one yard line to a point directly behind the posts.

The Camp Grant stars played good individual games. Whiting and Lathrop did wonders in the line, which at one time put up a marvelously stiff battle, holding the jackies for seven downs within three yards of the goal line, the extra downs resulting from a penalty. Jack Eddy and Shiverick shone on the offensive. But the sailors also had their own stars, such as Johnson and Pat Smith. And in addition they had team work.

Six Bands on Hand.

Nearly all the spectators had to stand along the side lines, as a few chairs were the only seats provided. Six bands were on hand, and one embarrassed the camp forces by starting some jazz music while another was playing the "Marseillaise" as a compliment to the French officers, who, with their British associates, were guests of honor.

The feeling in Camp Grant tonight is that a manager and a coach are needed before any more games are attempted. Lineup:

PURPLE GIVEN FIGHT BY IOWA; VICTORS, 25-14

Lack Unity; Brace as the Hawkeyes Show Battle.

BY EVAN STONE.

Iowa fell before the Purple yesterday, 25 to 14, in a game filled with thrills for the spectators. As a conditioning contest for the Michigan game it was good practice for the Purple, so good that at some stages of the play the Hawkeyes seemed to be using the home crew as a scrub eleven.

Overconfidence affected the Purple almost to the extent of causing their downfall. The Northwestern linemen had heard of Iowa's defeats this year, but they evidently failed to take into account the fact that a certain Laun, because of injuries, had failed to figure in the Hawkeye lineup when Coach Jones' team was licked. Laun rudely awakened the Purple by many little drives for five and ten yards at a pop.

Lack of Unity in Play.

The Purple failed to play the brand of football put up against the Aggies chiefly because of a lack of intelligent unity in their play. Frequently the interference and the runner parted company at inopportune times, resulting in the spoiling of an attack well started. Lackadaisical tackling and an apparent desire to take things easy after a lead of a few points was attained were other faults of Capt. Randolph's men.

The Purple aerial attack was brilliant and successful. Ellingwood displayed unusual ability in nabbing the oval out of the atmosphere while two or three Hawkeyes were chasing him. Much of the credit for the passing game was due to Mush Underhill's coolness and accuracy in tossing the pigskin. He placed the ball with the niceness of a big league pitcher. Underhill also was the star in defensive work and vied with Koehler and Ellingwood in line smashing.

Holmes, given his first tryout in a conference game, showed himself no mean dodger in evading tacklers by a sidewheel twisting motion, and also was responsible for a fifty yard run after intercepting a Hawkeye pass.

No Scores at the Start.

Neither side was able to score in the first quarter. Iowa failed to make a first down and seemed contented to rely on a punting game. Just before the quarter ended Murphy's men started another march, rather an air flight, toward the Hawkeye goal. The airline combination, Underhill to Marquard, netted thirty-five yards in two attempts. Koehler and Underhill added more yards through the line, and Ellingwood went over right guard for the first touchdown.

Iowa came back fiercely and caught the Purple napping with a long pass, Davis to Jenkins. Before the Purple could get interested Laun had plowed along to the three yard line and with another buck went over. Davis kicked goal and the score was tied.

Ellingwood Goes Over.

Underhill rallied his cohorts and soon the Purple had the ball on the Hawkeye twelve yard line. Here Referee Birch made a dash of fifteen yards toward the Purple goal. Underhill promptly tossed a pass to Ellingwood, who dashed ten yards for a touchdown.

Iowa resorted to the air route and had good luck until Holmes intercepted a pass on his own forty yard line and made a pretyt run of fifty yards. A forward pass to Arries netted a touchdown.

The second half opened with Capt. Davis and his men full of fight and pep. Line plunges by Laun and Capt. Davis, aided by forward passes, put the ball on the Purple three yard line. The Purple braced and held the visitors for three downs, but Laun squeezed over on the final attempt.

Purple Opens Strong Attack.

Northwestern apparently began to fear Iowa might steal the victory, and the Purple team for the first time showed a real brand of hard football. By a straight march down the field, using only line bucks and end runs, the Purple backs smashed through the Hawkeyes for a touchdown. The linemen opened holes for the point of attack and a back was never stopped without a gain. The fourth quarter was a seesaw affair with the Purple having the edge.

HARLEY REFUSES "PRO" OFFER.

Hammond, Ind., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—The Fort Wayne Friars today accepted the challenge of the Hammond football club to play for the professional championship of Indiana at Hammond Dec. 2. Hammond plays Wabash at Wabash tomorrow. Chick Harley of Ohio State today wired Manager Parduhn of the Hammond club refusing $200 a game to play with Hammond after the close of the conference season. Harley stated that will return to Ohio State next year.

WEST VIRGINIA SQUAD UPSETS W.-J. TEAM, 7-0

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

Fairmont, W. Va., Nov 17.—[Special.]—Playing a game of football which was not expected by even the most ardent West Virginia rooters, the Morgantown eleven defeated Washington and Jefferson, 7 to 0, in a game which certainly stamps the Virginians as one of the strongest teams in this part of the country.

It was a battle from start to finish, but West Virginia had a more versatile attack. The locals played the open game for all it was worth, and it was this style of attack which gave them their touchdown in the second quarter, when Rogers hurled a forward pass to Kind, who caught the ball in the end zone. Rogers kicked goal for the final point of the game.

Fumble Stops Losers.

Washington and Jefferson threatened in the third quarter. By open attacks it carried the ball to the locals' two yard line, only to lose it on a fumble. After this fumble the visitors never threatened to score, and when the final whistle blew West Virginia had all the best of the hard, bruising battle.

Rogers and Bailey were the mainstays of the victors. There was nothing that either could not do offensively or defensively. In Bailey, West Virginia had a center who must be considered an All-America possibility.

Civil War Towns Celebrate.

Eight thousand persons turned out to see the contest, staged under ideal weather conditions. It goes without saying there is plenty of celebrating tonight in Harper's Ferry, Uniontown, Morgantown, Fairmont, and other towns made historic by the civil war. Lineup:

HARLEY LEADS BUCKEYE TEAM TO FRONT, 13-0

Two Field Goals and Forward Passes by Chick Win.

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Columbus, O., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Once more Ohio State university has won a football championship, and tonight the citizens of Columbus are parading the streets in joy and the students have lighted an immense bonfire on the campus, for Ohio State beat Illinois this afternoon in a desperate but ragged combat on the gridiron, 13 to 0, thereby eliminating all contenders for the western conference title.

For more than three-fourths of the combat the championship hung in the balance, then the Ohio machine, with Chick Harley at the wheel, started rolling as one would expect a championship machine to roll, and in a jiffy the title was clinched.

Harley Scores Early.

Not until well into the last quarter of the fight did Ohio demonstrate its superiority over the boys from Illinois. But when Ohio started it triumphed with admirable dispatch. Right at the start of the game Chick Harley broke loose for a long run and so did Boesel, then Harley ripped through for another and the ball was on the Illinois seven yard line, from where Harley booted it over the goal posts for three points.

Just at that time it looked as if the Ohio boys would pile up points until dark, but Bob Zuppke's men from Illinois braced and fought like trench men. For the rest of that period, all through the second quarter and then all through the third, the Illini fought.

Illini Lack Final Drive.

They fought until they were completely exhausted. At least three times during that spell they were on the verge of conquest. Most of the time they had the ball in Ohio territory, so close to the coveted goal that a successful forward pass or a long run around the end would have meant a touchdown, but each time when the Illini men were in striking distance of victory, they crumbled.

Possibly it might be more truthfully stated that Ohio always was able to brace under such trying conditions. At least Illinois failed not once, but three or four times when victory seemed coming its way. Once, while Ohio still possessed only three points, Illinois got close to the goal and tried a place kick from the twenty-five yard line. The ball hit one of the posts well above the cross bar, but instead of bounding over for a goal, it bounded back upon the field.

Buckeyes Spurt at Finish.

Even at the end of the third quarter there was no confidence among the Ohio rooters, but when the final period began the Ohio machine started rolling. One reason it rolled was because Frank Willaman was sent into the game as substitute full back. The first thing he did was to tear through masses of Illinois men for twelve yards.

He ripped through for another big gain or two, then Chick Harley, who, with the exception of the first two minutes of play, had failed in carrying the ball, began to show off with a forward pass. In not much more than a minute he had executed three of the prettiest passes one would care to see, and the third one netted a touchdown for Ohio, making a total of ten points and really settling the big battle.

Illinois had little pepper left after that, but Harley was just beginning to go. He had discovered apparently that he could pass and kick and wasn't limited to open field running, so he let this big Willaman tear through the Illinois men for a lot more yards of territory until he was close to the Illinois goal, then he deftly executed another of his carefree passes and the ball was on the twenty yard line.

Chick Boots Second Goal.

From there, when Illinois grew stubborn, Mr. Harley dropped back to the twenty-eight yard line and booted another field goal for the final score. There wasn't anything to fear after that.

Only a little more time remained, and the sun was down and darkness was coming on. Illinois got the ball on the kickoff and in desperation began a series of long distance forward passes. One was successful, and it put the ball in midfield, but before another could be turned out time had been called.

Zuppkes Stop Harley's Runs.

With the exception of the last quarter, when the Ohio boys really played in championship style, it was a bad game of football. There was not so much fumbling, but the play on both sides dragged and lacked unity.

Harley tried time after time to circle the Illinois ends for long runs, such as made him famous a year ago, but it was seldom he gained a yard. Often he was thrown for a loss. The Illinois men seemed to have mastered a defense for Harley's end runs. But when Harley started making passes and booting goals from the field, that was quite another thing. Illinois had no defense for that.

In Capt. H. J. Courtney and his brother, H. G. Courtney, and in Feybody, Harley had excellent men to aid him in completing the passes. In Boesel, Stinchcomb, Willaman, and Yerges he had daring fellows to carry the ball into Illinois territory.

Great Passing Fools Illini.

Harley's manner of making forward passes was so easy and tricky it was surprising. One never knew where one would be hurled, and perhaps he himself didn't, but he never was fussed by the advance of the enemy, and always just before being knocked to earth he either shot the ball to some nearby mate or tossed it carelessly to some more distant fellow of the opposite side, or possibly hurled it far over the middle to some comrade in the distance. Indeed, several of his passes for long distances were as accurate as a ball player could have thrown a baseball, but often they were muffed by the man supposed to get them, or knocked aside by an opponent.

As a result of his demonstration today, Chick Harley is rated even greater than a year ago, because he has come to the front as a kicker and a passer, and an all round man.

Field Too Small for Crowd.

Never before in Columbus had there been such a rousing football game, but Columbus still is young in championship football. As a matter of fact it is doubtful if there were 14,000 persons present, but just the same there might have been 40,000 had there been a place to put such a throng. All seat orders were filled weeks ago. Extra bleachers were put up at the ends and corners, but the stands were not such as one is wont to see when championships are decided.

The stands, however, seem to be the only thing about Ohio's football outfit that isn't of championship timber. Possibly Ohio will now erect some big stands, but it ought to do it before Chick Harley gets away. Lineup:

NOTES OF OHIO GAME

Columbus, O., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Coach Zuppke and his Illinois team left for Urbana tonight considerably disappointed. They had so many chances and failed. About fifty Illinois rooters were present, some coming by train and some by motor car. The band was left at home because of the war or something.

Among the "old grads" of Illinois who were here was Fred Lowenthal of Chicago, member of the 1901 eleven.

Before the game began betting odds were 2 to 1 in favor of Ohio. However, a lot of Ohio boys lost their next months' pin money by wagering even money Ohio would win by fifteen points.

Ohio was considerably handicapped because the cheer leader had flunked in some study and wasn't eligible to lead. A couple of alumni cheer leaders took hold and did the best they could, which was not at all bad.

Between halves a greased pig was turned loose for a lot of freshmen to capture. The pig did not get a fair chance and was pinned to earth by a dozen fellows as if he were an Illinois player.

PURDUE BEATS WABASH, 28 TO 0

Lafayette, Ind., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Purdue walked over Wabash in the first half, but in the second half the Boilermakers, with several substitutes in their lineup, found themselves unable to add to the score already made, and the game ended 28 to 0 in favor of Purdue. Wabash threatened in the first period and the last, but Purdue's goal was never seriously menaced. When Huffine and Allen were in the Purdue lineup the Purdue backfield played brilliantly, tearing off long runs and making successful forward passes.

On account of Indiana scouts being on the sidelines the Boilermakers did not open up on trick plays. Lineup:

AGGIES BEATEN BY NOTRE DAME IN 23-0 FUNERAL

Hoosiers Down Michigan Farmers in Slow and Wearying Contest.

Notre Dame, Ind., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—In one of the longest games ever played on Cartier field, in which Notre Dame was penalized exactly seventy-five yards during the four periods, Notre Dame defeated the Michigan Aggies, 23 to 0. The game dragged miserably. Frequent unsuccessful forward passes, fumbles, and penalties marred the play of both sides. On the second formation Bahan ran eighty yards for a touchdown, only to be recalled, and Notre Dame was penalized for holding.

Brandy, hero of the Army game, put his 138 pounds behind the ball for a kick of no less than sixty yards each time during the absence of Miller. Barry, a Chicago player, furnished the surprise of the day when he circled around the entire M. A. team for a touchdown.

N. W. COLLEGIANS BEAT KNOX, 28-19

Naperville, Ill., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Northwestern college established a strong claim to the state college football championship by defeating Knox of Galesburg, 28 to 19. Northwestern has a clean slate for the season, and Knox was not beaten until today. Both have eliminated the leading contenders for state honors.

Knox jumped into the lead before the game was a minute old. A long forward pass worked on a shoestring trick netted a touchdown, but Northwestern came right back and took a 7-6 lead by plunging to a touchdown and then kicking goal. Each team scored in the second period and again in the third, then Northwestern salted the verdict by putting over a fourth touchdown in the final quarter and holding the visitors scoreless.

LOMBARD TRIUMPHS OVER BRADLEY, 49-0; PUTS IN TITLE CLAIM

Galesburg, Ill., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Lombard college football team claims the "little nineteen" college conference championship after beating Bradley Polytechnic of Peoria, 49 to 0. The teams were well matched in weight, but Lombard's skill and speed enabled it to run away from its opponents. Only Truesdale's punting kept Lombard from running up a larger score.

Lombard on the kickoff took the ball to Bradley's goal without interruption by line bucks and end runs in five minutes of play. Peden's forward passes and Wilson's receiving were factors on Lombard's side, while Jackson's line plunges and end runs made great gains. Lombard's string of victories is unbroken. Lineup:

INDIANA BUMPS DE PAUW, 35 TO 0

Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 17.—De Pauw was no match for Indiana and lost, 35 to 0, in the annual struggle today after defeating all other secondary schools in the state and holding Purdue to a low score. With several Boilermaker scouts in the grand stands Coach Stiehm had his men use only straight football until the final period, when both teams opened up their assortment of passes. Indiana gained 127 yards on the aerial route and De Pauw 53.

When Rowland Was a Choir Boy

by HARVEY WOODRUFF

EVER hear that Manager Clarence Rowland once was a choir boy? Well, neither did the writer until the facts were called to his attention by a friend of the White Sox pilot in Dubuque, who whispered the wonderful tidings to a pledge of secrecy.

Since incidents in the early life of all great historical characters are of absorbing moment to future generations, let us here record how and why Clarence Rowland became a member of the boys' choir in St. John's Episcopal church in Dubuque just as it was narrated to the commentator.

The Rev. W. B. Walker, now of Joliet, while pastor of the church whose present rector, the Rev. John Dysart, is grand chaplain of the Elks, organized the choir. Among his first members were the players of the Ninth Street Sluggers, who later adopted the name of Rowland's Colts. The baseball team joined in a body.

At first, so the story runs, young Clarence's behavior was such that he would have been given his unconditional release except for the fact that his voice, since so useful and melodious on the coaching lines, was the strongest of the choir. Just when matters were approaching a crisis a Dr. Delafield of Chicago offered a gold medal for good behavior. Clarence went after that gold medal just as he went after the world's pennant, and he won it.

One of the factors in securing this award was an experience with three Chinamen. Young Rowland noticed the oriental visitors, who at that time were a rarity in Dubuque, and with several of his cronies followed the celestials down the street after the services, intending to exercise the American boy's prerogative of "having some fun."

To the choir boys' surprise, one of the Chinamen recognized them, and expressed a desire to attend Sunday school, as he had been doing in a neighboring town. That stopped the "having fun" program, and instead the choir boys promised to pilot the orientals the following Sunday.

In rounding up the Chinamen the choir boys were late to services, but when they did appear with three six foot Mongolians in tow there was a sensation among the good people. Right then and there Rowland's title to that gold medal for good behavior was established. Moreover, the parents of the choir boys were complimented for having such zealous offspring.

AMATEURS PLAN TO BAR JUMPERS; HELP FOR MINORS

At a meeting of the executive committee of the National Baseball federation in the Hotel La Salle yesterday it was decided to coöperate with the minor leagues next season and bar players who "jump" teams of organized baseball. The recent championship series of the federation was attended by much wrangling as a result of alleged amateur teams employing men under contract or reserve to minor clubs. An agreement with the minors' governing body will be drawn up before the annual meeting of the federation at Johnstown, Pa., on Jan. 18, and later will be submitted to the minors' officials.

The federation leaders also voted to get into touch with the committee in charge of sports at army and navy camps, so as to arrange games with service teams. Proceeds of such contests, as well as of other feature battles of the federation will be donated to some war cause.

The cities holding teams in the federation are:

Chicago, Johnstown, Pa., Pittsburgh, New Kensington, Pa., Cleveland, Dayton, Cincinnati, Canton, O., Akron, Columbus, Toledo, Detroit, New Orleans, Wheeling, and Louisville.

The members of the committee at the meeting were:

President, C. C. Townes, Cleveland; C. E. Martin, Cincinnati; Tom Nokes, Johnstown; Virgil E. Zetterlind, Detroit; Henry M. Tuffo, Chicago.

YALE FRESHMEN WIN FROM HARVARD, 14-0; SLIPS PROVE COSTLY

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 17.—Yale freshmen outplayed Harvard freshmen in their annual football contest today and won, 14 to 0. Open field running by Lay, the Yale half back, brought a touchdown for the visitors in the first period. With Humphrey, the Harvard full back, carrying the ball most of the time, Harvard frequently got far into Yale's territory in the next two periods, but fumbles and intercepted forward passes cost them a score. In the last period Dines, the Yale half back, snatched a Harvard forward pass from the air and raced forty yards for the Blues' second touchdown. Lineup:

Manchester, N. H., Nov. 17.—Tufts provided a surprise to New England football followers by defeating Dartmouth, 27 to 0. Capt. The Green, unable to work the forward pass successfully, resorted to old style football, but the Tufts line held firm.

GOPHERS SWAT MAROONS, 33-0, BEFORE 16,000

Fierce Assault Nets Minnesota Plungers Five Touchdowns.

It was Rouse's turn and he could not advance. Capt. Brelos walked back and said: "Well, boys, we're holding our own, but let's punt this time." Blocki punted and the game was over.

In just nine plays the Gophers marched sixty yards on straight bucks and off tackle smashes. On the last plunge Carroll took the ball and stepped across a spot from which three Maroons had been carried away by the massed and driving interference.

Early in the second quarter Minnesota was penalized fifteen yards, so Ecklund tried a punt. The ball sailed down the field and hit Rouse in the chest. In a wild scramble five or six Minnesota men tried to pick up the precious oval and only shoved it along to the one yard line, where Elton dropped on it. Higgins again kicked out of danger, but the Minnesota machine plowed straight back for another touchdown. This time it was Lampi's turn to put over the score.

Forward Pass Variety.

The next time the Gophers got the ball they started forward passing just to amuse themselves. Blocki intercepted one, but when Chicago tried the same stuff Lampi grabbed the ball and ran to the Maroon ten yard line. It was first down for the Gophers on the one yard line and while Arntson stopped to figure out whose turn it was to make a touchdown some kind official called time for the first half.

After the intermission Chicago battled more fiercely than ever and reduced the average gain of the Gophers from seven to three yards, but Mr. Arntson began his end running spree and the scores rolled up just as fast.

Straight Smashes Score.

Straight smashes brought another touchdown in the third period, with Kingsley horning into the touchdown company, but only after Stagg's men had held three times on their three yard line.

Arntson pulled off two more twenty yard dashes in the fourth quarter and carried the ball to the two yard line. The Chicago line held firmly again under its own goal posts so Arntson trotted around McDonald for the final touchdown. As Williams did not number his players, here is the "probable" lineup:

AERIAL ATTACK BY FORDHAMITES BEATS CORNELL

Forward Passes Topple Big Red Eleven at Ithaca, 27-6.

Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 17.—Long forward passes, perfectly executed, and the dashing work of the visitors' back field were responsible for Cornell's defeat by Fordham, 27 to 6. Only in the first period, which was scoreless, did Cornell offer any real opposition. Cornell was within scoring distance several times, but was checked by Fordham's defense.

A forward pass, Brennan to Fitzpatrick, scored Fordham's first touchdown in the second period. After an aerial attack had been successful, Erwig ran fifteen yards in the third period for a touchdown. Forward passes led to both touchdowns for Fordham in the fourth period.

Cornell's touchdown was the result of a blocked Fordham punt in the fourth period, Colvin falling on the ball back of the goal lines. Lineup:

AERIAL SCORE PUTS SENN OUT OF TITLE RACE

Uteritz of Oak Park Wins 3-0 Victory in Preps' County Series.

BY GEORGE SHAFFER.

When Senn managed to stop all Oak Park's other trump cards on offense the Chicago prep divisional champions had contrived no defense capable of interfering with the flight of a forty yard drop kick, and Quarter Back Uteritz's unerring toe kept the Oak Parkers from defeat in the race for the county high school football title by providing the winning points in a 3 to 0 victory at Oak Park.

Uteritz booted the victorious field goal in the first period. Most of the game was featured by in and out play by the Suburban league champions, who found themselves unable to make openings in Senn's strong forward wall either by battering or wiles.

Each Misses Good Chance.

Each team had a chance to score one touchdown, but could not come through. Oak Park's opportunity was in the third quarter, when the home team's back field started with a flash of power which sent Senn on a retreat for thirty-five yards, when Senn braced and the teams exchanged punts

Then a pass, Phelps to Savage, netted twenty-five yards for Oak Park and Savage tore around end for twenty-five more On the next plunge Gordon planted the ball on Senn's one yard line with a three yard plunge Here Senn stiffened and held for four downs. Hurst stopped a Senn march by intercepting a pass. There was another flurry of action for Oak Park in that period, when Uteritz ran back a punt for thirty yards, but he fumbled, nullifying the gain.

Senn Spurts at Finish.

The fourth quarter was as much Senn's as the third was Oak Park's. The Chicago leaguers started off by gaining twenty-five yards on a beauty pass, Crippen to Loftus. Fortune veered on the next play, when Oak Park recovered a fumble. Senn's line held for downs, then Senn punted, hoping for an Oak Park fumble. Phelps made the hope good and Senn rooters went wild when one of their players planted the ball in Oak Park's ten yard zone.

In the shadow of its own goal Oak Park fought back in an effort to preserve its claims to the Cook county title, and by a desperate defense held Senn to a gain of only three yards on three downs. McMillan of Senn then tried a place kick and missed by inches, and Senn's high hopes were dashed for good when Oak Park punted out of danger on the next play. The game closed with Oak Park's ball in midfield.

While several of Oak Park's back field men played listlessly, Senn had players who distinguished themselves. Capt. Beardsley of Senn made every play against his part of the line at left tackle dangerous for Oak Park, and McMillan did sparkling work in Senn's sallies with the ball. He outpunted Phelps. Oak Park uncovered a good line man in Carpenter, who went in for Lewis, the guard, who broke his arm in the Evanston game last week. Carpenter broke up Senn's bucks through center and recovered four of the fumbles which made the game a happy go lucky affair.

County Title Game Saturday.

Oak Park will play the final game to decide the Cook county title with Hyde Park's heavyweight champions of No. 2 division in the Chicago league next Saturday morning. The field will be selected at a meeting of officials of both schools this week. Lineup:

Suburban League

For the first time in four years a New Trier team succeeded in scoring on Evanston High, but the Kenilworth boys could not deliver with enough punch to win, and Evanston won the tightest battle of this year's Suburban league, 7 to 6.

Both teams scored in the second quarter, with Evanston making its points first. A series of hard drives ripped New Trier's line, and while New Trier's defense was reeling two passes put the ball on the one foot mark, from where McDonald plunged for the touchdown on the next play.

New Trier rapidly pulled itself together and dealt Evanston a counter blow in the same period, when two end runs, three passes, and a penalization against Evanston gave Searle the chance to score. Searle, however, failed to kick the goal. At the end of the first half Evanston again had the ball on the one yard mark, but was never near New Trier's goal in the second half. Score:

Seidel, Thornton's star, scored in the beginning of the second period and kicked the goal after touchdown, making all the winners' points. Davis made Bloom's touchdown on a peculiar play in the fourth period. Lassers recovered a Thornton fumble and ran over his goal line with the ball, but dropped it when tackled hard. In this same session Vaughan of the losers was over, but in the final twelve minutes of play Randall clinched it for Riverside.

HYDE PARK HEAVIES TROUNCE ENGLEWOOD IN 55 TO 7 MASSACRE

BY PREP.

Hyde Park's heavyweights wound up their season in a blaze of glory, knocking Englewood flat, 55 to 7, at Stagg field. The game makes Hyde Park champion of the No. 2 division in the Chicago league and gives Scanlon's boys formal right to play Oak Park for the Cook county title next week. When the final whistle blew the Blue and White eleven had amassed 257 points.

Jerry Neff, Charley Caldwell and Edgar (Eckie) Murphy composed a scoring triumvirate for the Hyde Park school, and their deeds brought cheers and shrills of joy from a couple thousand high school boy and girl rooters along the side lines. Caldwell was removed from the game because of an injury, but was reported all right last night.

Englewood possessed one brilliant star in Bromstedt, a veteran of the 1916 City league champions, but the plucky Purple schoolboy played himself out trying to stop the whole Hyde Park team. He scored Englewood's one touchdown before he left the game completely exhausted.

Right Tackle Holladay of Hyde Park booted six of the seven goals after touchdown. The one he missed was from a difficult angle, but some of those he made were just as hard to kick, and collegians from the Midway and other schools who were watchers followed his work as avidly as that of a major league scout watching a bush league Ty Cobb. Lane, 7; Crane, 3.

Anderson's smash over left guard on the fourth down with only a minute remaining for play gave Lane Tech a touchdown and a 7 to 3 victory over Crane Tech at De Paul field in a pre-luncheon combat. The touchdown was made possible by a fumbled punt. Crane outplayed its rivals during the first half, when Bernstein kicked a beautiful drop from the twenty-five yard line near the boundary line. Lane came back strong in the final period, rushing the ball three times inside of the ten yard line, only to lose it on fumbles twice and once on downs with two yards to go on four downs. Lineup:

Division No. 1

Full Back Scott totaled four touchdowns and his points won for Austin heavyweights in a No. 1 division game, postponed from Oct. 13. The first half was Morgan Park's and ended with that team ahead, 13 to 0, but in the second half there was no stopping Scott. Final score was 26 to 16. Scott took the ball from scrimmage formation and carried it through the entire field in the third period. Morgan Park's scores were made by McKeever in the first period, and Ingwerson in the second on a triple fumble. McKeever tore off an eighty-five yard run in the third quarter. Lineup:

Lake View, 18; Marshall, 0.

Playing off to eliminate one-third of the triple tie for lightweight laurels in division No. 1, Lake View beat Marshall at De Paul field, 18 to 0. The result reverses the outcome of the elevens' former meeting, when Marshall won. Wheeler and Kessnick hit the line hard on bucks, and Capt. Bulot of Lake View, with long runs, was just as hard for Marshall to stop. Bulot ran fifty yards for a touchdown early in the game. Mueller, Marshall's full back was hurt and had to be assisted off the field toward the end of the game. Lake View and Bowen will try to get together for a post-season game to determine the official division No. 1 lightweight winner. Lineup:

Lake View [18].	Marshall [0].

Bowen, 33; Schurz, 7.

Bowen lightweights ran over Schurz, 33 to 7, on the losers' field. Schurz's score resulted from a fumble which Sluzynski picked up on his forty-five yard line. To determine a clear title in division 1 it will be necessary for Bowen and Lake View to meet. MacDonald's sturdy line plunging and Capt. Dunlop's forward passing featured. Fearing violence at the hands of outsiders, Bowen rooters and players requested and got a police escort after the contest. Lineup:

SENN'S LIGHT TEAM TREATS HARRISON TO 38 TO 0 LACING

Senn Lights in their last scheduled game in Division No. 2 administered a decisive beating to Harrison at the Techs' own field, 38 to 0. It was Harrison's first defeat. The losers were unable to withstand Senn's powerful onslaughts and the north siders began their scoring in the first period, when Ryan went over after a series of off tackle plunges. In the second period Wilmarth scored through center after Senn again advanced half the field by pounding through the line.

The game was rough from start to finish and Sidney Komie of Senn and Verzin of Harrison both had to take time out often to recuperate from the battering. The first half ended 19 to 0 in Senn's favor.

Maloney Makes Long Run.

Maloney played a brilliant game in the final half, several times getting away for long runs by driving through tackle or outracing Harrison's players around end. In the third period Ryan ran seventy yards through the whole field for a spectacular touchdown. Lineup:

Three Hurt in This Game.

In a contest featured by rough play and the injury of three youngsters, Parker High won from Hyde Park at Stagg field, 20 to 7. Dwyer of Hyde Park suffered a broken collarbone but played the remaining ten minutes of the first period before quitting the game. Gardner of the opposition is thought to have a broken instep, according to a hurried diagnosis. F. Horton of Hyde Park played a quarter of the game with a fractured collarbone before he found it out. After the teams battled without result during the first half Parker scored first when Rankin raced eighty yards for a touchdown. Brown registered later on a split play, going fifty-five yards, and L. Moran counted on a line plunge in the final quarter. Adler made the Hyde Park points in the later period. Lineup:

LATIN, 19; PARKER, 14.

In the annual contest between the north side preparatory schools, Chicago Latin defeated Francis W. Parker school, 19 to14, at Lincoln park. Parker gained consistently by plunges, but Latin's speed in the open field more than offset this. Wheeler and McBride of the winners each raced for a touchdown from kickoff, and these long dashes brought the downfall of the Parkerites, who played gamely, although it was an uphill effort. McBride was the idividual star. Lineup:

ST. IGNATIUS SHOWS LOYOLA STIFF FIGHT, BUT SUCCUMBS, 7-0

Loyola academy was handed a surprise by St. Ignatius, but succeeded in pushing one touchdown across for a 7 to 0 victory on the home field before 4,000 fans. The visitors did excellent work with short passes, but found Loyola's line too powerful to penetrate. The break came in the second quarter, when Shuman of St. Ignatius misjudged a wicked punt. Loyola recovered the ball on the visitors' thirty yard line, then long runs by O'Donoghue and Hurley carried the ball across. Florence wrenched his right arm and Plunkett sprained an ankle. Kealy, Jefferson, and Raggio excelled for St. Ignatius. Lineup:

12	H7	HK	H6	9S
13	QC	10C	H9	10S

West secured nine tricks only.

The above was the actual play and the result failure for the declarant. The correct play would be as follows:

Tricks.	N.	E.	S.	W.
1	H10	HJ	HQ	2S
2	6S	D4	3S	AS
3	8S	2C	4S	KS

7	H2	H5	QS	JS
8	H4	H8	HA	7S
9	D2	D8	DJ	D3

What ever south played at trick ten would give west contract and game.

West wanted to compel south to lead hearts or diamonds, therefore the black cards must be taken away from south.

That would appear to be a simple proposition, but comparatively few players are able to recognize the situation when it occurs.

West lost in the original play because south led a club at trick five—a play which west should have made impossible.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES.

North Manchester, Ind.—[To the Editor.]—Four men played a game of bridge. When the game ended A had 3,085 points, B had 1,685 points, C had 2,558 points, and D had 1,354 points.

Please tell me how much the winners win and how much the losers lose. Please state the correct way of keeping score in a game of four where you pivot. Would you use the plus and minus system? I. E. P.

Ans.—It is impossible to figure the scores as given by you as you do not give the points lost by each player. The method used in that would not answer here.

The players must play rubbers and figure the net score of each rubber. The gross scores have no meaning.

HYDE PARK TAKES SOCCER TITLE IN OVERTIME CLASH

Heavies Beat Lane, 2-1, in Final for Chicago Prep Honors.

BY JOE DAVIS.

Scoring a goal in the first half of two extra five minute periods, Hyde Park heavyweight soccer team won the Chicago High school championship by defeating Lane, champion of the northern division, 2 to 1, at Bricklayers' field yesterday.

It was a hard fought game, the boys as usual being over anxious and not showing as much combination as they displayed in preceding league matches. Around goal both teams were weak, although Payne of Hyde Park scored both goals for his side with hard drives.

Hyde Park Scores First.

Attacking the south goal in the first period, Hyde Park scored after fifteen minutes of play. Lane had a free kick from goal and Schwartz sent the ball only a few feet. Munson, who was close by, tried to kick the twisting ball, but moved it only a little, and Payne, coming in fast, drove it into the net, Lipp being out of his goal. The rest of the half was well fought, Wolf stopping a shot from Ortlep and Lipp clearing a slow shot by Paquet.

Early in the second half Ortlep came within a few inches of scoring for Lane, his long drive hitting the cross bar. A rush up the right wing by Lane sent the ball over the rear line two feet, but as the chalk mark had meen obliterated, Krueger centered the ball in front of goal, enabling Topper to count and tie the score.

Six minutes later Hyde Park was given a penalty kick when a Lane back handled the ball. Legoff shot over the bar.

Payne Wins Game.

Hubank was the star for Hyde Park. He is one of the best backs developed in the high schools. Payne's two goals brought his total to nine out of twelve scored by Hyde Park. Munson kicked strongly for Lane and Ortlep did good work at half. Topper and Comstock played well on the Lane front line. Lineup:

Hyde Park [2].		Lane [1].
Wolf	Goal	Lipp
Becker	Right back	Munson
Windett	R. half back	Olsen
Legoff	Cen. half back	Ortlep
Hill	Left half back	Kuhl
Paquet	Outside right	Zielenske
Reimer	Inside right	Krueger
Payne	Center	Comstock

Goals—Payne [2], Topper. Referee—Gemmill.

BOXERS PROMISE TO EARN SPURS AT TROOP CAMPS

Ring Stars of the Country Busy Teaching Game to Our Soldiers.

BY RAY PEARSON.

Just how much the boxers who have gone into the army cantonments as boxing instructors will accomplish for the good of the service remains to be seen, but judging by the ambition and enthusiasm with which these boys are taking hold, they should make good, with good spelled all caps.

With Lightweight Champion Benny Leonard in uniform at an eastern camp, Featherweight Champion Johnny Kilbane a lieutenant at Camp Sherman at Chillicothe, O.; Charley White at Camp Grant at Rockford; Mike Gibbons, the acknowledged "best" of the middleweights, working with the boys at Camp Dodge at Des Moines; and Packey McFarland, the Joliet brewer, who did everything in pugilism except cop the title, in action at Camp McArthur at Waco, Tex., the results of their efforts will be watched with interest, not alone by followers of pugilism but by many others who have more or less been opposed to the sport in which these boys have been topnotch performers.

Instructors Must Use Brains.

Just how much authority is vested in these army boxing instructors is not known by the writer, but undoubtedly they will be permitted to go just as far as they like as long as the results are for the good of the service. Therefore, it is up to the boxing instructors themselves to use their brains as well as their physical attainments to demonstrate their value in this time of the world war.

There has come into the hands of the writer a letter written by one of these army boxing instructors which gives an insight into the work that is being performed at the army cantonments. It was written by Packey McFarland, and it is worthy of mention here that in the heyday of his fistic successes Packey was termed the business man of the ring.

Packey Noted for Acumen.

Packey earned that title by the use of the gray matter perhaps more than by the wonderful physique with which he was endowed. When it came to licking an opponent he used his brains; when it came to making money and making that same money work for him afterwards, he showed the same mental acumen, and although he never acquired the title he managed to make nearly $200,000 out of his work as a pugilist.

"I have 27,000 men to work on down here in Texas," says Packey, "and it is some job. My work is not all in boxing, for I also help to run the football games. At the last game which was played on Sunday we took in $2,000 at the gate. That money we have taken and put into suits and other things that the boys need for the gridiron.

"It has been a hard job to get started in making money for the camp, for we have a debt of something like $6,000. But when we get to boxing I think things will go along better and that everything will be cleared up nicely. Am building a hall which will seat 7,000 people and expect to pull off bouts every week. The hall can be used for other things. We'll also have moving pictures."

JACKIE BOXERS MILL AT C. A. A.

An evenly balanced card of boxing and wrestling events marked the opening show of the season at the Chicago Athletic association last night. Jackies from the Great Lakes naval station engaged in a number of three round no decision bouts that furnished much excitement for the clubmen and their guests.

One of the best bouts brought together Thomas White, lightweight champion of the station, and J. W. Romero, a young Portuguese boxer who is coming along fast in the game. The bout savored of the real article when Romero sent White to the canvas with a vicious swing that caught the champion off his guard. White was up at the eight count, and for the balance of the bout mixed things aggressively.

Another lively bout was between Bliggenstorfer and Sager. Sager, a new man at the game, ran into a swinging blow that stretched him on the canvas, but his fine physical condition told and he was on his feet without the danger of a knockout. Harry Flint of the hospital school and Joe Bonk of the instruction camp furnished another snappy exhibition in the welterweight scrap.

In the feature event of the wrestling bill William Demetral found Young Hackenschmidt easy picking. He won the first fall in 8:10 with a head lock and the second in 3:49 with a body scissors. It took Ben Reuben three minutes to win a single fall match from Young Brown, who substituted when Young Beell failed to appear. John Freiburg won a single fall bout from Pat Conley in 25:00 with a standing crotch hold. Pete Katonsky, several pounds lighter than his antagonist, wrestled Herman Kock to a thirty-five minute draw.

INQUISITIVE FANS

Chicago.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Who started and finished pitching for the Chicago Cubs in the game that was played off in New York, which decided the National league championship the year that Merkle forgot to touch second base, and also give me the year this happened? H. C. S.

Pfiester started pitching. Brown replaced him in the first inning and finished the game. It was in 1908.

Statesan, Wis.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Kindly publish the correct batting average of Joe Jackson and Happy Felsch for the season of 1917, exclusive of the world's series. I note some newspapers give Jackson a higher average than Felsch and some give Felsch a higher average than Jackson for the regular 1917 season. HODDEN LEAF.

The official averages of American league players have not been compiled yet by the secretary of the league, but will be issued for publication in the near future. The unofficial averages compiled and published during the season differ considerably on account of typographical and telegraphical errors.

Auror, Ill.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—A is on first base. B hits a ground ball and the ball hits A. The umpire calls A out. Does B get credit for a hit? DOC. S.

Certainly. See rule 85, section 4, fifth paragraph.

Chicago.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—[1] In an argument over the play made by Faber during the last world's series when Faber stole third with Weaver occupying that base a question arose as to whether Faber, after touching third, was legally entitled to second base, providing he had not been touched with the ball. [2] Could Weaver have scored from third, providing he had not been touched with the ball, and Rariden, just have touched home with the ball in his possession, or would it have been necessary to touch Weaver in order to make the "putout at home?" [3] Can a runner after having touched a preceding base, return to the base he originally occupied and be legally entitled to that base? &4] Is a runner forced out on a play as follows: A occupies first base. B occupies second base. Pitcher throws to first baseman. He chases A. A slides into second. Is B forced out at third or must he be touched out? PETER CARR.

[1] Yes. [2] Weaver could be put out only by being touched with the ball while off third. [3] Yes, if he has no right to the preceding base. [4] No. The argument contained in all the queries is settled by two rules. Rule 52 gave Weaver the right to third base until he had "legally touched the next base in order or was legally forced to vacate it for a succeeding baserunner," and Rule 59 says a runner is forced to leave his base only by reason of a batsman becoming a baserunner. In other words, Faber could not force Weaver off third unless Faber himself was forced off second to make room for a batsman.

CHICAGO BOXERS WIN ARMY BOUTS

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Rockford, Ill., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Boxing honors in an interbrigade program of seven bouts tonight went to the Chicago brigade—the One Hundred and Seventy-second infantry brigade, commanded by Brig. Gen. Charles H. Martin and composed of the Three Hundred and Forty-third and Three Hundred and Forty-fourth regiments.

Fighters of these two organizations won four of seven matches with men from the One Hundred and Seventy-first brigade made up from districts in Wisconsin and Illinois outside of Chicago. The big Y. M. C. A. auditorium was jammed to the doors with soldiers.

The fights won in four classes by the Chicago brigade were the following:

115 pounds—Leo Dominowski, Company D, 343d, defeated Alexander Altier, Company F, 342d, in four rounds.

125 pounds—Harry Althoff, Company F, 343d, defeated William Denning, Company C, 342d, in one round.

145 pounds—Tom Kelly, Company H, 343d, defeated Harry Fine, Company A, 342d, in four rounds.

Heavyweight—George Howell, Company H, 344th, defeated Jack Brennan, Company B, 342d, in four rounds.

The One Hundred and Seventy-first brigade won three fights:

135 pounds—Harry Diamond, Company G, 342d, defeated Johnny Pape, Company E, 344th, in four rounds.

175 pounds—Walter Wulk, Company K, 341st, defeated C. W. Curtis, Company M, 344th, in four rounds.

The 145 pound class match was a draw between Tommy Harrison, Company F, 343d, and Fred Hedlin, 332d machine gun battalion.

Charley White instructed and trained the winners. Danny Goodman did the same for the losing brigade.

EVERY BILLIARD ROOM IN STATE TO ASSIST FUND

Schedule Special Events; Noted Players Volunteer for Ambulance Cause.

BY JOE DAVIS.

A state-wide campaign in aid of the American Billiard Players' Ambulance fund was launched last week at a joint meeting of the Illinois committee and officials of the Chicago Billiard league held at the Illinois Athletic club.

In each town and city a local chairman was appointed to take charge of the work in each section and this week a letter and subscription blanks will be forwarded to each of the 5,000 rooms in the state. A plan of action will be outlined and suggestions made for various billiard and pocket billiard tournaments in aid of the fund.

Prominent Players Volunteer.

Many special events are being planned in the Chicago district and every player of note has volunteered his services. Each roomkeeper in the loop district will be asked to contribute $1 for every table in his room and those outside the loop will be asked to contribute 50 cents.

Louis A. Bensinger, in addition to making a special contribution, has placed an office in his Monroe street establishment at the disposal of the local committee. Last week Tom Foley staged a rapid fire event at midday which netted $40, and a similar amount was realized from a three cushion match at Burdick's room.

The week of Dec. 9 to 15 is to be known as Ambulance Fund week, when every cueist in the state will have a chance to do his bit for the boys across the water.

Reiselt Keeps League Lead.

Two victories over John Layton of Detroit kept Otto Reiselt of Philahelphia at the top of the Interstate Three Cushion league with a record of six straight wins. Layton, who last week was tied with Ellis for second place, fell to fourth position, leaving Ellis next to Reiselt.

Tomorrow night George Moore of New York, who won the world's championship tournament at Chicago, will make his first appearance here this season, meeting Joe Capron at Bensinger's. Following is the standing:

Woods and Waters

by LARRY ST. JOHN

BULLETIN.

The quail season in Illinois opened Nov. 11. Daily limit, 12; possession limit, 36. Season closes Dec. 9. Birds fairly plentiful in southern part of the state.

BACK in the days when the butcher donated a piece of liver when you bought a ten pound pail of lard for 50 or 60 cents and when us kids spoke awefully, and economically inclined old ladies spoke awfully, of the man who smoked 10 cent cigars, there used to be quail hunting in these midwest states.

In that golden age dad threw on his hunting coat on the spur of the moment, grabbed his gun from the corner by the woodbox—the woodbox that never would stay filled—called the dog, and beat it for old man Smith's woods. 'Long about supper time he would come home, the dog covered with burrs—our job was to pick and comb 'em out—and with his hunting coat pockets filled with bob whites.

Today things have changed. If you would a-hunting go for quail now, you get a dog the summer before, for $1 or several hundred dollars, and send him down to Jim or Bill to train, and the evening before the opening day you crawl into a sleeper (after paying your war tax on same) and ride all night and maybe two or three days and nights.

Jim or Bill meets you at the train and whisks you to the hunting grounds in a flivver. Three or four, or more, days later you get back home with the three dozen birds the law allows (if you have been lucky) and an awful crimp in your finances.

Even if you can afford the expenditure you can hardly afford to have the missus make divers and sundry remarks about what the trip has cost—and surely one cannot do much posing around as a mighty hunter with three dozen little quail (if you have been that lucky), which every one knows cost the price of a backlot chicken farm.

Seriously, the men who love quail shooting, and most sportsmen do, but have limited means and leisure, deserve pity. Like the near-virtuous ladies in the stories, they merit pity, not censure; they are more sinned against than sinning. Unfortunately, legislators have been unable to see this and sportsmen have been blamed for the ever decreasing covies.

The quail in our northern states are far from being extinct, but they are threatened and radical steps have been taken to postpone the calamity. Consequently northern quail hunters are almost extinct. Ohio, New York, Michigan, Iowa, and Minnesota now have no open season on quail and similar laws are likely to be passed soon in other states.

Every bird lover knows that quail are becoming scarcer, but few have a very good idea as to the reasons. They grab at the most obvious, the formula of which is as follows: Sportsmen shoot quail; therefore if sportsmen would stop shooting the quail would increase. It sounds plausible, but we would like to point out that all the hoaxes and frauds perpetrated upon the human race are done by dangling the plausible before the eyes of the unthinking 95 per centum.

It is true that market hunters have pillaged our quail supply shamefully, but market hunting can be kept within reasonable bounds. The real causes of disappearing quail are conditions. Charles Darwin, the greatest thinker that ever pondered the causes of decreasing and increasing animal life, says: "If not one head of game were shot during the next twenty years in England, and at the same time if no vermin were destroyed, there would in all probability be less game than at present."

Present day conditions work in favor of vermin. Years ago when farmers had only a small part of their land under cultivation there were wood lots thickets, and patches of rag weed for bob white to seek refuge in. Intensive agriculture has eliminated these and one pair of hawks or foxes now will clean out a covey of quail in a season.

"Climate plays an important part in determining the average numbers of a species and periodical seasons of extreme cold or drought seem to be the most effective check," continues Darwin. Without the protection and feed of the wood lots, and especially the little corners in the rail fences, winter finishes what vermin leaves.

Our object in writing this is not to protest against the trend of legislation, which is inevitable, but to clear the sportsmen of the charge that they are responsible for the passing of bob white. Also to drop a hint to quail hunters that they had better do their hunting now, because it will soon be a thing of the past, so far as it concerns those of us who cannot afford to go down south for a few days over the dogs.

KIECKHEFER BEATS TREDICK.

Augie Kieckhefer strengthened his hold on third place in the Chicago league by defeating Bert Tredick of Conklin's [45], 57 to 36, in seventy-four innings, at Mussey's Madison street room. Tredick's high run was 3, Kieckhefer getting 4. The latter averaged one for his last thirty-three innings.

ECKHART SRS., 28; PULASKI, 13.

Eckhart Seniors defeated Pulaski Park, 28 to 13, and Eckhart 135 pound five beat the Pulaski Honor club, 18 to 2, at Eckhart park.

WALK TO HAMMOND TODAY.

Dan O'Leary and five others will walk from Madison and Halsted streets to Hammond today for the dinners. The man that first says "Let up" will have to pay the bill. James Cosgrove, John Karney, George Anderson, William Harding, and Charles Bromner will start with O'Leary.

HAMLIN, 53; LARRABEE, 0.

Hamlin Tigers shut out the Larrabee Y. M. C. A. basketball team, 53 to 0, at Hamlin park.

TRAILERS SET LEAGUE RECORD FOR LONG GAME

Robins and Pirates Break National Mark by 22 Inning Battle.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Two down and out teams hung up a new National league record for extra innings this year. They were Brooklyn and Pittsburgh, both anchored in the second division when, on Aug. 22, they fought each other for twenty-two rounds before the former league champions won by a score of 6 to 5.

This game topped by one inning the previous National league record for overtime which was made by the New York and Pittsburgh teams three years before. It was July 17, 1914, when the Giants and Pirates battled for twenty-one innings before the Giants copped by a tally of 3 to 1. It is a coincidence that the Pittsburgh team was mixed up in both the record breakers.

Not a Major Mark.

This does not touch the major league mark for extra rounds, however. That still is held by the American league and was established in 1906 by the Philadelphia Athletics and Boston Red Sox. They combated for twenty-four rounds on Sept. 1 of 1906 and the Athletics finally triumphed by a score of 4 to 1.

In all these long battles the competing teams started out to play double headers, for it is not possible to work in twenty innings or more before dark if play starts at the usual one-game hour.

130 Overtime Games.

The longest 1917 game in the American league went seventeen innings and was played by the Yankees and Browns, the former being victor. There were two sixteen round fights in the American campaign, both ending in draws. Three games went fifteen innings in that league and the White Sox and Red Sox were hooked up in one of them, which resulted in a tie. Altogether there were 130 extra inning games in the majors this year, equally divided between the two leagues.

INDOOR GAMES TODAY.

Chicago Indoor league teams will engage in their final practice games this afternoon before the opening the league race next Sunday. The schedule today: Magnets vs. De La Salle institute, Thirty-fifth and Wabash; Rogers Park vs. Vincennes, 3518 Ellis avenue; Shaw Taxis vs. Marquette Crescents, St. Alphonsus hall; Dodger Trainings vs. Central Turners, 2046 West North avenue.

INTERLAKEN, 5; CALUMET, 1.

La Porte, Ind., Nov. 17.—The Interlaken school defeated the Calumet high school lightweight soccer team of Chicago, 5 to 1, this afternoon. It was Calumet's only defeat this season.

EXTRA SESSION CALL BY LOWDEN EXPECTED SOON

City's Financial Crisis and Other Questions to Come Up.

Men close to the state administration have a strong impression that an extra session of the Illinois legislature is to be called by Gov. Lowden, probably early in January.

Gov. Lowden, who is now at his Arkansas plantation, said before he started south that he will take up the question of an extra session definitely immediately upon his return. He is expected back in Springfield Wednesday or Thursday.

The strong pressure that will be exerted upon Gov. Lowden by the city of Chicago to summon the general assembly in order that legislation may be enacted that will relieve the financial crisis in municipal affairs is likely to be supplemented by a demand for legislation along other lines, amounting in effect to a general reopening of legislative business if an extraordinary session call is issued.

Equalization Board to Go.

It became apparent in Springfield during the week just ended that Gov. Lowden is ready to insist that a special session, if one is called, shall consider the abolition of the present state board of equalization and the substitution therefor of a tax commission.

Important changes in the deep waterway law that was put through during the Dunne administration are also understood to be in contemplation.

That Gov. Lowden would include provision in a call for legislative consideration of Chicago's traction problem if the city council should demonstrate that it has a definite plan of procedure to suggest is considered certain.

Failure of somebody to engross properly seventeen senate amendments to the central registration act, which radically changed the system of registration of voters in Chicago, has threatened the validity of the act, although it is operating as though it were perfectly enacted and in the spirit in which the legislature framed it. Political leaders and the election officials will insist that the proper amendments be made to the law in view of the great importance of the impending primaries and elections of 1918.

Soldiers' Voting Act Needed.

Gov. Lowden's attention has been directed also to the necessity of a comprehensive act that will permit the Illinois soldiers in the field to vote at the approaching elections. The "soldiers voting" law that was passed through the last session, it develops, is not sufficiently broad to cover all contingencies.

Slight changes, not significant but important to proper working of the law, may be required in the private banks law, passed by the last legislature and up to a referendum vote of the state at the November election, 1918.

'KEEP ON KNITTING!'

Letters to Women Indicate Sweaters May Be "Necessities," After All.

Women knitters of the Calumet Country club are not at all convinced that sweaters and scarfs and helmets are not "necessities," despite the opinion of Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Secretary of War Baker. Mrs. W. C. Brown, chairman of the Calumet club's knitting brigade, which has sent more than 100 woolen pieces to United States sailors and soldiers, cites letters of thanks just received. This from a regular army private still in the United States:

"I wish to thank you for the sweater I have received. It fits me splendidly and is just the thing to wear in the cold climate we have at the fort. I am a Chicago boy myself and it is certainly pleasing to learn that the folks in dear old Chicago have not forgotten the regulars in the fanfare of cheering the draft army. Your gifts will be our battle gages. We will do our best to deserve your kindness."

And this from the commander of an American cargo vessel:

"We are loaded to the last inch and therefore have to contend with cold spray, ice, and solid waves across the decks even in moderate seas. The western ocean in the winter is not the warmest place imaginable, and I want you and the other members of your club to know that every article you have so generously given your time to making will be worn constantly by men whose gratitude will be felt every day. Under present conditions we maintain sixteen men on lookout, keeping them on one hour and off three. In normal times a lookout stands two hours, but that is too long in the cold."

BILL STARS FOR ITALIAN RED CROSS BENEFIT

There's going to be a benefit for the Italian Red Cross Ambulance fund on Tuesday, Nov. 27, and on the preceding Tuesday there's going to be an auction of tickets for the show.

Just who's going to do what hasn't been decided yet, but the managers are Nat C. Goodwin and Arnold Daly, and both of them are going to appear. Otis Skinner won't be in Chicago on either the day of the auction or the show, but he's coming back for both. The auction, as well as the show, will be held at Cohan's Grand Opera house, which has been donated for the occasion by the management.

Other actors who have promised to appear are William Gillette, Edmund Breese, Blanche Ring, Joseph Santley, Estelle Winwood, Ernest Lawford, Mary Nash, and Jack Hazzard.

The management promises that the show will begin at 2:30 and all will be over by 5, "because the actors must have their tea."

MUSICIAN DROPS DEAD.

R. Augustin Morris, a musician with a studio at 63 East Grand avenue, dropped dead yesterday in A. A. Waterman & Co.'s store at 158 South Clark street. Death presumably was caused by heart disease. Mr. Morris was 55 years old and lived at 831 Edgecomb place.

ZONE SYSTEM IS CAMPAIGN PLAN FOR PRESIDENT

Democrats to Test It in Senate Fights Next Fall.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—The Democratic national committee is preparing for a practical demonstration of its new plan of zone management of political campaigns with a view to testing its efficiency for use in the next fight for the presidency.

The first important test is to be made next fall in the zone system comprising the Rocky Mountain states, where five United States senators are to be elected.

In the meantime members of the national commission and state committeemen are to meet in Chicago Nov. 26 to extend the system by the organization of what will be known as zone No. 4, comprising Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, and Wisconsin.

Test in Rocky Mountain Zone.

The Rocky Mountain zone selected for the practical working test next fall is No. 7, comprising Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, New Mexico, and Utah. In all but Utah a United States senator is to be chosen.

An organization has already been created with former Gov. John E. Osborne of Wyoming, chairman, and John T. Barnett of Colorado, secretary. The campaign committee, under the zone system, consists of the national committeemen and state chairmen of the states included. Full control of the campaign will be vested in this management in the belief that better results will come by having men in charge who are familiar with local conditions.

Miss Rankin May Run.

A close fight is expected in Montana. Senator Walsh will not be opposed by the Democrats. Miss Rankin is regarded as a candidate for the Republican nomination.

In New Mexico the Democrats are confident of gaining a seat, largely through the belief that Senator Fall will not run again.

GERMAN-MADE EDITOR ISSUES NEW PUBLICATION

'Constitutionalist' Has High Praise for German-American.

Edward Garstin Smith, a political philippicist educated in Germany, who was seized by government authorities in April and reprimanded for anti-American utterances, is just off the press with "The Constitutionalist," which he announces as the "publicity medium of the Constitutional society."

Officers and Others.

A few pages farther on are the names of officers, directors, and "some members of the society." The vice president is Otto E. Pietsch. The list of directors includes J. Adam Bede, Fred Gerlach, W. E. Wittstein, Charles R. Young, Ernest Heldmaier, and Paul F. P. Mueller.

Among those listed as members are Emil Eitel, Max Eitel, Horace L. Brand, Paul Brauer, Theodore Brentano, Alex Glogau, O. Guenther Sr., Joseph A. Holpuch, G. F. Hummel, Henry W. Huttman, Ernst J. Kreutgen, Theodore Oehne, James S. Kirk & Co., Fred Pabst, L. W. Pietsch, Ferdinand Schapper, John B. Strassburger, Richard A. Witzke, and Robert M. Sweitzer.

Mr. Smith, who in April said the war was a "Morganized Wilson frameup," and that "to oppose Wilson is true patriotism," quotes the preamble of the constitution of the United States in his latest publication and says among other things:

"Why has this society so many German-American members? Our reply is that it is not our fault that in this country there is so large a per cent of thinking and reasoning men among the German-Americans and so small a per cent among the money mad Anglo-American business men.

Disparages America.

"I went to school in Germany; likewise in America. I know the difference. The German is thorough; the American is superficial. This country is sissifying. Few American men today could teach—they are too ignorant."

Entering the realm of politics, he says:

"Today neither the Republican nor the Democratic party possesses even the fragments of a principle."

Dr. Hillis to Speak Twice Today on Wat Issues

Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, whose lectures on his observations on atrocities committed by the Germans in Belgium and France have attracted wide attention, will speak at the Sunday Evening club in Orchestra hall tonight on "The National Crisis." Dr. Hillis also will occupy Dr. Gunsaulus' pulpit in the auditorium at 11 o'clock this morning. His subject will be "How Germany Lost Her Soul."

The new Packard Coupe, four passengers

The cost of shelter

Ages ago—to shut himself away from the storm, man built his first home.

And from that queer shack has grown the modern house, with all of its comfort, convenience and beauty.

In winter one doesn't live in a tent.

In fact, no reasonable price has been too great to pay for proper shelter—and a large part of man's energy is spent that he may acquire it.

Now, the automobile may be made a sort of modern extension of the home—a protected and comfortable corridor leading to all destinations.

Ever thought of it that way?

Our realized aim is to build enclosed cars that will carry abroad the pleasant atmosphere of the home—and will withstand the wear of all-the-year-round service.

For Twin Six power and economy make every enclosed Packard a general purpose car—a winter-and-summer, town-and-country motor carriage.

It doesn't cost a great deal more to have proper shelter all the year round.

As is its wont occasionally, the week's real estate market showed a decided reversal of form as compared with that of the previous week as respects both the volume as well as character of the business reported or made matter of record. Indeed, the showing was so poor as to be discouraging were it not for the fact that these apparent market lapses frequently occur under good market conditions, an unusually dull market frequently cutting into a series of unusually active ones.

The explanation is to be found in the fact that what are seemingly dull markets are frequently the very reverse, the difference being that their activities are represented by negotiations which are without any surface indications but which when carried to a successful conclusion make the active market. To put it in another way, the apparent activities of one week are only the result of the quiet negotiations of preceding weeks, so that it is not fair to assume that a bad week's showing is to be accepted as positive indication of bad market conditions.

More Apparent Than Real.

While it clearly would be a mistake to say that present market conditions are good, the average showing of the market all during the fall months has been so much better than was that of last week, that it is not at all unreasonable to assume that its apparent dullness is to a certain extent due to the causes indicated and is more apparent than real. As a matter of fact, it is known that several quite important deals which were expected to be closed last week, as well as during the preceding week, had to be carried over because of delays on the part of one or the other of the principals to sign up. This serves to call attention to what has been for some time, and what is now, a conspicuous feature of the market, and that is the great difficulty reported by brokers in closing up deals. This is always the case to a large extent in times of market depression, but it seems to prevail now to an unwonted extent, according to the reports of brokers.

War Conditions Factor.

As a matter of fact, it is not at all surprising, considering the general feeling of apprehension and consequent hesitancy because of the present critical conditions in both Russia and Italy, and the consequent heavy burdens which this country may have to assume. It is only natural that the investor, the merchant and manufacturer, should conclude that it is a time for one to move slowly in the case of any new undertakings he may have in hand and wait until the atmosphere clears somewhat. Again there is the big slaughter in the prices of securities, with its possible disturbance of the general money market and the possibility of labor troubles on the railroads, which are regarded as serious enough in Washington to lead to talk of possible government control of the roads, all of which are calculated to cause the prudent investor or business man to hesitate.

Movement Toward Realty.

It is not at all surprising, therefore, that the market is a rather slow one. Indeed, it is really so much better than what one would expect under the circumstances as to justify the growing belief that out of the present distrust and apprehension regarding security and most other forms of investment there will come a strong general movement toward real estate. Real estate securities are already in keen demand, a demand far in excess of the supply, and real estate, where value conditions are healthy, is the probable and logical next step in the search for stable investments on the part of prudent investors.

October Transfer Record Shows a Falling Off

As was to be expected, the transfer record for October is of an unfavorable character, a decrease being shown both in the number and total consideration of the deeds filed for record. They were 4,322 in number, with total consideration of $4,731,001, as compared with 5,238 and $11,606,163 for October, 1916, a decrease of 916 in number and $6,874,062 in amount. There was a decrease of ninety-two in number and $50,901 in consideration under the Torrens system, while applications for initial registration showed a decrease of sixty-two.

THE FIRWOOD GOING UP

New Six Story Apartment Building on Sheridan Road Represents Investment of $250,000.

The Firwood is to be the name of the latest high grade fireproof apartment building planned for Sheridan road. It will be located at 721-29, between Pine Grove and Clarendon avenues, will be six stories high, on a lot 100x275 feet, and together with the land will represent an investment of approximately $250,000. It will contain thirty-six two room and twenty-four three room apartments. It is particularly interesting as marking the distinct trend toward the apartment hotel, because it is thought to meet the demand of war time conditions for compact quarters and economy in household expenditures on the part of tenants, and a greater proportionate income to offset higher building costs on the part of builders, who must secure the maximum income from their land holdings.

Each apartment will have one or two living rooms, a breakfast room, kitchenette, and bath, a large dressing closet, and one or two wall beds. It is being erected by A. Irving Jordan, the builder, and in connection with its construction S. W. Strauss & Co. have underwritten a bond issue loan of $160,000, two to ten years, at 6 per cent. The work of construction has begun.

Leases and Loans

The week's market in the way of leases of business space was a fair index of the tone of the general real estate market, the showing being exceedingly poor. In fact, there was nothing of any importance either in the downtown market or outside. On the other hand, there was considerable doing in mortgage loans, the most of them being building loans, indicating the evident improvement in the building situation in certain lines.

In the most important of these Greenebaum Sons Bank and Trust company have underwritten a bond issue loan of $375,000, two to ten years at 6 per cent, on the nine story cooperative apartment buildings to be erected on 131x86 feet of ground at 60-70 Scott street, being the northwest corner of Stone street. Each apartment occupies an entire floor and contains eleven rooms and five baths.

The following owners occupy apartments at an aggregate annual rental of $30,000: C. H. Morse Jr., L. B. Kilbourne, A. J. Pardridge, James R. McKay, and Arthur Jackson. The annual income of the building is estimated at $70,000, while the estimated value of the buildings and land is placed at about $550,000.

O. H. Haugan is trustee in a loan of $65,000, eight years at 6 per cent, of John Hamilton on the 254x125 feet, south front on Sixty-third street, comprising the block between Eberhart and Rhodes avenues. The frontage is being improved with a large garage.

Blanche B. Pearson has given a trust deed to W. S. Herrick to secure a loan of $85,000, ten years at 6 per cent, on the property at the southwest corner of Menard avenue and South boulevard, 180x178 feet.

The Hibernian Banking association is trustee in a loan of $60,000, ten years, at 5 per cent, to Stewart Hodges on the 264x120 feet in Diversey parkway between Herndon and Ward streets, being improved with a building for the Berhalter Health Food company.

The Chicago Title and Trust company is trustee in a loan of $50,000, five years at 5 per cent, to Kate C. Lyndon, secured by the property in University avenue, 179 feet north of Fifty-eighth street, lot 40x170¾ feet, west front.

The California Ice and Coal company has given a trust deed to J. F. Stepina to secure a loan of $50,000, five years at 6 per cent, on the property at the southeast corner of Fifty-second street and Millard avenue, 266x347 feet.

The Central Trust company is trustee in a loan of $60,000, five years at 6 per cent, secured by the property at the northwest corner of Sangamon and Van Buren streets, 195x125 feet, 65x95 feet, south front in Van Buren, 60 feet east of Morgan, and 100x125 feet, west front in Morgan, 95 feet north of Van Buren.

E. G. Krumrine & Co. have made a loan of $30,000 for five years at 6 per cent to George Higginson Jr. on his residence and sixty acres of land at Winnetka.

The American Bond and Mortgage company has made a loan of $45,000, five years at 5 per cent, to Robert and Barbara K. Smithson, secured by the apartment building at the northeast corner of Central Park boulevard and Monroe street, with a frontage of 200 feet overlooking Garfield park.

The United States government has leased from Harry A. Rasmussen the one story brick and stone building at 5834 Normal boulevard for eight years and ten months from Sept. 1, 1917, at an annual rental of $2,400, or $21,200 for the term. The building will be occupied as a garage.

Tom Fisher has leased from La Verne W. Noyes the store at 115 North Dearborn street for a term of years from Dec. 1, 1917, total rental $14,200. The deal was negotiated by Ross & Co. and George P. Chiagouris & Co. The latter firm also leased for W. F. McCarthy to Theodore Reckas the store at 102 North Dearborn street, terms from Dec. 1, total rental $13,350.

A. M. Krensky & Bro. report the following 5 per cent loans: $30,000 for David Labowitch on fifteen apartment building at Kedzie boulevard and Darwin terrace; $16,000 for Dr. H. C. Welcker on six apartment building at 919-21 Margate terrace; $12,000 for Thomas T. Sullivan on six apartment building at 4447-49 Malden street; $11,000 for Rosa Thums on six apartment building at 1517-19 Olive avenue.

NO SET MOVING DAY, TOPIC OF LUNCHEON TALK

"Abolition of set moving days" will be the subject of discussion at Tuesday's weekly luncheon of the Cook county real estate board at the Hotel Morrison, the speaker being L. M. Smith, president of the Chicago Renting Agents' association.

A nominating committee of eight active members, comprising Herman Teninga, Walter J. Becker, Peter Foote, William Geisseke, E. H. Haley, John G. Stone, Jesse T. Wilson and J. F. Hecht, was chosen at the monthly meeting of the board last week to join with the directors' nominating committee to make up a ticket of officers for the coming year. The directors' committee consists of R. C. Duncan, C. T. A. Anderson, Emil J. Dirks, James Calek, C. F. Durland, A. S. Ruud, and R. G. Badeaux. The election will be on Dec. 11.

The committee having in charge the tenth annual banquet of the board to be held in the grand ball room of the Hotel La Salle on Tuesday evening, Dec. 6, is making rapid progress in connection with the arrangements. Arthur C. Lueder is chairman of the committee of sixteen.

Forest Preserve Gets 50 Acres in Thornton

The forest preserve district has acquired from the Brownell Improvement company a tract of fifty acres in the township of Thornton, east of the right of way of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois railroad, for an expressed consideration of $12,637; also forty acres from Merrill K. Sweet et al., east of Thornton road, for $10,000.

The forest preserve district has acquired from Margaretha Meyer a tract of 31.3 acres on the north branch of the Chicago river, north of Douglas road, in the township of Niles, for an expressed consideration of $15,650. It adjoins the Guy W. French tract recently acquired by the district.

E. Orris Hart & Co. Takes Over Grannis Company

E. Orris Hart & Co., First National Bank building, have purchased and taken over the real estate, loan, and renting business of G. P. Grannis & Co., successors to Krauter, Grannis & Co., located for some years in the Union Bank building, 25 North Dearborn street. In this connection they have opened a north side renting office at the northwest corner of Montrose and Beacon street.

ADDS 20 ACRES TO PARKHOLME SUBDIVISION

W. H. Britigan Buys Land Near Western Electric Co. Plant.

William H. Britigan has added another twenty acres to his Parkholme subdivision near the plant of the Western Electric company. The tract, which was purchased from Raymond Mulvaney, adjoins the Douglas Park branch of the Metropolitan elevated road near Fifty-second avenue, and while the consideration is not disclosed, it is said the sale was on the basis of $5,000 an acre. It has been subdivided into 180 lots and will be sold with underground improvements and sidewalks. Mr. Britigan opened his Parkholme subdivision of eighty acres about a year ago and he reports that nearly all of the original 640 lots have been sold.

Record was made of the transfer by Charles Corkery to August Sievers, excavating contractor, of a tract of ten acres at the northeast corner of Eighty-seventh street and California avenue, consideration nominal, but said to have been at the rate of about $1,000 an acre. It is to be subdivided and placed on the market.

There was filed for record the purchase by Edgar A. Bancroft, the lawyer, and his wife, Mary K. Bancroft, from Edmond Kenealy et al. of a farm of 160 acres in the township of Lyons, being about two and one-half miles south of Hinsdale, for an expressed consideration of $31,000.

$175,000 SALE WILL BRING NEW INDUSTRY HERE

Manufacturing property was not as much in evidence in the week's business as during the previous week, there having been only one really important transaction closed. This was of much interest not only because of the value of the property involved, about $175,000, but also because it involves the establishment of a new industry here.

It was the sale by the West Coast Roofing and Manufacturing company et al. to Charles S. Bird and Philip R. Allen of Boston, Mass., of the property at the northeast corner of Seventy-sixth and Justine streets. The ground comprises 6.7 acres and is improved with a one story and basement building, 100x300 feet ground dimensions, erected about three and a half years ago.

A nominal consideration is given in the transfer, which is made subject to an incumbrance of $50,000, but the property is said to have been valued at about $175,000. The purchasers are members of the firm of Bird & Son of Walpole, Mass., manufacturers of paper and roofing materials, who have had an agency only in Chicago for the last twenty-five years. It is understood they plan to erect another building on the property of the same size as the present one.

South Shore Apartments Are Formally Transferred

Record was made of the formal transfer by Edward F. Carter to the South Shore apartments, a corporation, of the nine story South Shore apartment building facing Lake Michigan, east of Everett avenue and north of Fifty-fifth street, lot 130x198 feet, for an expressed consideration of $830,000, subject to $530,000 incumbrance.

MEDIUM PRICED APARTMENTS ARE MOST IN DEMAND

Noticeable Absence of Deals of Any Magnitude Is Feature.

While there was a fair movement in the aggregate transactions in apartment property, it was made up for the greater part of medium priced stuff, there being a noticeable absence of deals of any particular magnitude. The market as a whole made an indifferent showing, comparing rather poorly with the markets of several preceding weeks.

The thirty-five apartment building on 196x160 feet of ground at the northeast corner of Indiana avenue and Forty-fifth street, which was taken by A. Irving Jordan recently from Charles W. Carmen and William G. Arnold at a reported valuation of $135,000 in part payment for the apartment property at Forty-second street and Drexel boulevard, has been sold by Mr. Jordan to Maurice H. Needham, a nominal consideration being given, subject to an incumbrance of $70,000.

High Grade Property Transferred

The sale is announced of an extra high grade three apartment building, comprising the property at the southeast corner of Hyde Park boulevard and Kenwood avenue, known as 1347 Hyde Park boulevard, which was completed about a year ago. It is of the English basement type, is on a lot 47½x90 feet, the apartments containing eight rooms with three baths and sun parlors, and renting at $175 a month each. It was sold by Hans A. Leafgreen to Dr. Frank Henry Davis, and while a nominal consideration is given, the consideration is said to have been $45,000, it being a cash transaction. T. D. O'Hern of C. W. Hoff & Co. was the broker.

Hyde Park Apartment Sold.

The new, extra high grade six apartment building at 5115-17 University avenue, on a lot 50x164 feet, west front, just south of Hyde Park boulevard, having a gross annual rental of $7,100, has been sold by Albert F. Marthe to Samuel J. Goldsmith for a reported consideration of $47,000, subject to an incumbrance of $29,000. Two Apartments to Cost $115,000 on Cornelia Ave.

A transaction involving the erection of two thirty-six apartment buildings, to cost about $115,000 each, on Cornelia avenue near Rokeby street was an interesting feature of the week's news. The transaction covers the premises 841-49 and 851-59, lot 180x143 feet, north front, which has been sold by Beatrice Hillinger to Adolph Turnbull, a nominal consideration being given. The sale, however, is said to have been on the basis of about $175 a front foot. Mr. Turnbull plans to erect on the property at 841-49 the Weller apartments and in the remainder of the frontage, 851-59, the Virginia apartments, each to contain thirty-six apartments, to cost, as indicated, about $115,000. In this connection he has secured two loans from the Chicago Title and Trust company, trustee, each for $65,000, six years, at 6 per cent.

OUTSIDE SITES FOR BUSINESS LEAD FOR WEEK

Outlying Deals Pass Others in Realty Market.

Outside business property made the best showing in the week's business. There was an unusually interesting transaction in manufacturing property, and residence property was represented by several noteworthy transactions in Chicago and along the north shore, but there was little doing of any particular importance in apartment property. Outside business property, on the other hand, had several noteworthy transactions to its credit, although there was none of any great magnitude.

In point of magnitude a Blue Island transaction held first place. It was the sale by William H. Pronger et al. to Blair McElroy of the property at 348 Western avenue, lot 65x150 feet, improved with a building containing a 1,200 seat theater, two stores, and four suites of offices. A nominal consideration is given in the deed, the sale being subject to an incumbrance of $25,000, but the property is said to have been valued at about $90,000. Mr. McElroy takes title for the Fitzgerald-McElroy company, theatrical agents.

Buys for $75,000.

James Davis, manufacturer and dealer in wall paper and paints, has purchased from Herman A. Uihlein the property at the northwest corner of Milwaukee avenue and Lincoln street, 73x125 feet, the consideration being reported at about $75,000. Mr. Davis is improving the lot with a four story and basement brick and steel reinforced building, to cost about $125,000.

Mr. Davis expects to occupy all of the building, except a small store on the ground floor, with his business. In connection with the construction of the building Greenebaum Sons' Bank and Trust company has made a serial bond issue loan of $100,000, two to ten years, at 6 per cent.

Record was made of the transfer by Walter L. Gaines to Joseph Baataglia of the store and flat property in Vincennes road 200 feet northeast of Seventy-fourth street, lot 105 feet, east front, by 141 feet on the north and 103 feet on the south, for an expressed consideration of $56,000, subject to an incumbrance of $31,500.

Barry Avenue Site Sold.

Record also was made of the transfer by William Seymour to Louis Schetnitz of the property at the southeast corner of Clark street and Barry avenue, lot 128x177 feet, with store and flat improvements, a nominal consideration being given, subject to an incumbrance of $29,850.

The property at the southeast corner of West Sixty-first and Carpenter streets, lot 48x122 feet, with store and flat improvements, has been conveyed by Leo Kuklin to William Zimmerman, a nominal consideration being given, subject to an incumbrance of $17,000.

RESIDENCE IN KENWOOD SOLD; PRICE IS $40,000

Winnetka and Glencoe Properties Figure in Week's Deals.

The sale of a handsome Kenwood residence figured in the week's real estate news. It comprises the premises at 5051 Ellis avenue, a twelve room detached colonial brick structure on a lot 55x175 feet, which has been sold by James E. Clenny of the Sefton Manufacturing corporation to William A. Morgan of Buffalo, N. Y. The consideration is not disclosed, but it is understood to have been $40,000. James J. Parker & Co. were the brokers.

A north side residence deal was reported in the purchase by Mrs. Helen M. MacNeilledge, wife of C. A. MacNeilledge, from Hettie L. Reynolds of the property at 56 East Elm street, about 400 feet west of the Lake Shore drive. The lot fronts 16 2-3 feet and is improved with a nine room stone front dwelling, which has been occupied for several years by Mr. and Mrs. MacNeilledge. The consideration is said to have been $8,000. Mrs. E. G. Tracy represented both parties.

Winnetka Residence.

A transaction in high grade Winnetka residence property under the Torrens system was the sale by William Aitken to S. C. Ingraham of Evanston of the property at 500 Maple avenue, the consideration not being disclosed but said to have been $25,000. McGuire & Orr were the brokers.

They have also sold to Mr. Aitken two acres on the ridge, overlooking the Indian Hill Golf club. Mr. Aitken is said to be acting for one of the members of the club, consideration not disclosed, but said to be about $6,000 an acre. It is said plans are under way for the erection of a handsome residence on the property.

Glencoe House Purchased.

Comfort H. Compere of C. H. Compere & Co., real estate, has purchased from Frederick H. Smith the attractive residence property at 770 Sheridan road, Glencoe. It is a ten room brick and stucco two and a half story dwelling on a lot 82x177 feet, east front, just north of Beach road, and while the consideration was not disclosed, it is said to have been around $17,000.

George F. Mills, western manager of the Niles-Bement-Pond company, has purchased from Mrs. Jennie H. Thomas of Dayton, O., the residence property at 5514-18 Kenmore avenue, lot 50x150 feet, adjoining the three apartment building of Mr. Mills. The property was conveyed for a cash consideration of $12,500, clear. Howard & Evans of Broomell Bros. was the broker.

Your Office is Comfortable during Coldest Weather, but What About Your Home?

While you sit in comfort in your office, are your wife and family *un*comfortable in a house with a poor heating system?

Big-Building heating has gone away ahead of home heating. Until recently it was better and cheaper in every way.

But now comes the Dunham Home Heating System—as perfect for the home as the nationally-known Dunham Vacuum System is for hotels and office-buildings.

The Dunham System for the home will keep your family as warm and comfortable as you are in your office, and do it on the smallest possible amount of coal.

The Dunham System of Heating controls the dampers automatically—it never lets the fire burn more than is necessary. Overheating as well as underheating is prevented.

The Dunham System is absolutely quiet in its operation. No radiator will hiss or pound, drip or spurt. That wonderful little guardian of the coal pile—the Dunham Radiator Trap—will prevent this waste of heat-units.

The Dunham Home Heating System will not only save you money on your coal bill, but will enable you to render a real service to the Government. The war has made, and will continue to make, severe drains upon the Nation's coal resources. Not a ton must be wasted. The national supply must be conserved and equitably distributed. The Dunham Home Heating System will help you help your country. The coal the Dunham System saves you will release that much coal for war needs.

LOVETT DENIES BOARD PROPOSES DRASTIC ACTION

Garfield Hopes the Public Will Solve Issue as to Coal.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Robert S. Lovett, administrative officer of the priority shipments board, issued a statement today calculated to calm a rising tide of disturbance in the business world over threatened curtailment of nonessentials.

Mr. Lovett said the board had no intention of any further action with respect to transportation, stating, however, that restriction of coal supply for nonessential industries was for Fuel Administrator Garfield to determine.

Administrator Garfield also issued a statement in which he urged voluntary economy on the part of manufacturers in order to avert the necessity of drastic coal limitations. Mr. Garfield said that in any event arbitrary limitation would be the last resort.

No Action at Present.

"While the situation may change," Mr. Lovett said, "I am not at this time contemplating any further action with respect to transportation of nonessentials. Priority order No. 2, with regard to open top cars, went as far as it seemed wise to go in dealing with that problem by restricting the transportation of nonessentials. Conditions, however, will be constantly observed. Whether the coal shortage requires restriction of the coal supply of nonessential industries is a question for the fuel administrator, Dr. Garfield, to determine.

"As to the war industries board, apart from my action under the priority act with respect to transportation, I may say that the industries of the country would seem to be justified in assuming from the action of the board in the matter of copper and steel prices and its record generally to date, that it is the desire and policy of the board carefully and liberally to conserve the interest and welfare of industries.

"I feel safe in saying that the board will take no action designed to eliminate any nonessential industry without reasonable notice and an opportunity to be heard."

Force as Last Resort.

"If voluntary economy on the part of industrial and domestic consumers, added to the increased coal production of 1917, which will reach a total of over 50,000,000 tons, does not provide fuel enough for the war and to keep our people warm," Mr. Garfield said, "there will come a time when some limitation will have to be imposed upon manufactures of nonwar products. In such an event the business world may feel sure that all the bearings of such limitations will be given thorough consideration and that the necessary coal will be obtained with the least possible interference with industry.

"Arbitrary limitation is a last resort and to be avoided if possible. In many cases industrial concerns have begun a voluntary curtailment of their use of coal. Such efforts will receive the fullest support and encouragement of the fuel administration."

"DIVIDENDLESS DAYS" URGED FOR RAILROADS

Shippers Attack Plea for Freight Rate Increase.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—Taking of testimony in the hearing of the 15 per cent advance freight rate case before the interstate commerce commission was completed today with the introduction of witnesses by shippers in an effort to show that the financial condition of the railroads is not as serious as had been contended and that an increase in freight rates now is unwarranted.

The principal witness was Clifford Thorne, who gave an exhaustive review of statistics prepared by the shippers tending to show that railroad securities had not declined as much as some others and that earnings of the thirty-eight eastern roads interested already had exceeded by $60,000,000 since Jan. 1 the estimates the railroads gave of their earnings for 1917 when the case was heard earlier in the year.

Cattlemen Protest.

Representatives of southwestern cattle interests testified that an increase in rates even in eastern territory only would work a hardship on the industry, which they said had been abnormally bad for the raisers for two years. Ed C. Lassiter, who raises cattle on a large scale in Texas, stated that the cattlemen who shipped to the middle western markets would be acted by the rates in the east because the packers would consider the increased transportation cost in purchasing.

Sam Cowan, representing the National Live Stock Shippers' Protective association, read telegrams from cattlemen saying their situation was serious because of the drought and the high cost of feed. One from Ike T. Pryor, president of the American Cattle Raisers' association, stated that the supply of calves this year would be 40 per cent below normal.

Asks "Dividendless" Days.

Benjamin C. Marsh, executive secretary of the American committee on the high cost of living, filed a brief attacking the proposed increase and suggesting "we have meatless days and wheatless days, and would it not be appropriate to have some dividendless days?"

Arguments will be heard Monday.

GRACE LYTLE'S STORY LEADS TO MORE ARRESTS

Two more arrests were made yesterday as a result of the story of Miss Grace Lytle, chief witness in the trial of Lloyd Bopp, charged with the murder of Policeman Herman Mallow of Oak Park. She said she was struck over the head with a hammer and left in the street for dead while returning from Burnham.

Thomas Hoban, a former bailiff and now a saloonkeeper living at 7437 South May street, and Frank Hitchcock, owner of the Burnham inn, were arrested early yesterday morning. Capt. Joseph Smith of the South Chicago station said the information would be turned over to State's Attorney Hoyne.

William Conroy and Albert Chase, who were in the car with Miss Lytle, were arrested Friday. The police are now searching for the driver, Frank McErlane, who, they say, has a prison record.

POETS' FUND HAS GOOD START FOR H. E. LEGLER CAR

$645 Received and $500 Pledged; Propose an Artists' Fund.

The Legler ambulance is "before the house" and that must be provided next. The amount subscribed for it is shown in the figures below. This, however, is the actual cash on hand and does not include two pledges of $200 each and one of $100 (received yesterday from a donor who wishes to be anonymous), besides that of the Chicago Library club for $200.

A notable contribution was that which was forwarded by the giver from Balboa Heights, Panama. The whole world is kin, indeed.

Artists' Ambulances?

Mrs. W. J. Zeh of the Perboyre Art and Civic league is very much in earnest in her plan to raise an ambulance for Italy by contributions from artists and all clubs taking an interest in art. There is a large number of such persons and organizations and she believes that the idea of naming an ambulance for an artist, especially one of the great masters, would be popular with all who wish to contribute.

As an earnest of her intentions she has sent in a check for $10 from her league and has spoken to the Municipal Art league which received her remarks favorably. She has also addressed several clubs having art departments and finds that they are also amiably disposed.

The Contributors.

The fund now stands:

In hand for Legler ambulance	$617.18
Room 2, Byford school	6.00
R. W. Glaw, Balboa Heights, Panama	5.00
Ida M. Lane	5.00
Giovanni Cavaleria	5.00

RUSSIANS MUST NOT RIOT, RULE BY FUNKHOUSER

Maj. Funkhouser again is clashing with the motion picture folks, this time because he doesn't think that pictures depicting the upheavals in Russia ought to be shown to an American public.

The film to which he objects this time is called "The Rose of Blood." "It consists principally of a series of unlawful actions of one mob after another," says the major. The film company producing the picture has suggested that nearly every picture carries the hint of wrong doing and believes it is not setting an example in novelty.

The major is quoted as having told a representative of the company: "You have had your fun with me, now I will have my fun with you." An exhibition of the picture is to be made tomorrow.

Where Style and Comfort Meet

The man who wants to be mighty comfortable won't object to the smart style of a "Klingmade" RUF-'n-READY and the chap who is strong for style will be delighted with its snug protection.

"Klingmade"
Ruf-'n-ready
Showerproof O'coat

You don't require a heavy coat to shut out the cold. A "Klingmade" RUF-'n-READY furnishes sufficient warmth without surplus weight. There is nothing flimsy or skimped about a RUF-'n-READY. It has no lining, because we put the lining cost in the coat itself. This same coat, if lined, would cost you $8 to $10 more and it would be no better looking or better wearing.

Style and Comfort clasp hands in the "Klingmade" RUF-'n-READY. It will take its place with the most swagger topcoat; and yet the worst midwinter day won't drive its wearer to seek other shelter.

"Klingmade" RUF-'n-READY is showerproof, too. It won't get soaked or soggy if you wear it in the rain or snow, because it's "cravenetted."

Ask your dealer to show you the four "Klingmade" RUF-'n-READY models—one for every man whatever his age—at from $15 to $30.

"Klingmade" RUF-'n-READY is sold everywhere by leading Haberdashers, Clothing and Department Stores.

Cutting Down Your Children's Shoe Bills

ONE of the biggest bills you have to face is the cost of your children's shoes—the climbing price of new shoes and the rising cost of repairs.

Because Neōlin Soles wear from two to six times as long as ordinary leather, they materially reduce repair charges.

And because Neōlin Soles are waterproof they give old shoes new life and make new shoes last longer than with ordinary soles.

Ordinary soles are not waterproof. After one thorough wetting they become spongy and porous, so that they easily soak up—literally breathe in—the moisture from damp playgrounds, from snow underfoot, from muddied crossings, and even from the thin film of water on pavements after showers and thaws.

Then the constant pressure of the walking or running foot stretches the welts and seams so that the shoes lose shape and wear out quickly.

But Neōlin Soles protect the uppers from this damage because they are waterproof.

And this waterproofness not only saves shoe bills, but doctors' bills, too.

For children with the constantly damp feet that ordinary soles cause, are always in danger of colds.

Eight million pairs of American feet have proved Neōlin's greater saving and its greater comfort, too. For Neōlin-soled shoes are so comfortable that they require no breaking in.

Be sure to have your children's new fall and winter shoes soled with Neōlin. And when you have their worn shoes re-soled, have it done with Neōlin.

Neōlin comes in black, white and tan—on and for men's, women's, boys' and girls' shoes—and it always bears the brand Neōlin.

Mark that mark, stamp it on your memory—Neōlin

EXILED KING OF MONTENEGRO AND THE KING OF ITALY—King Victor Emmanuel III. of Italy, who recently visited the French front, stopped in Paris to call upon his father-in-law, King Nicholas I. of Montenegro, who was exiled from his throne when the Germans invaded the little Black Mountain country. King Victor Emmanuel married Princess Helena of Montenegro in 1897. The photograph was taken at the railroad station before King Victor Emmanuel, who spends most of his time with his troops, returned home in haste at the news of Cadorna's losses.

What'll You Give Me?

SATURDAY—no school—yet Aunt Polly said he had to whitewash the fence. Work on a holiday! When he had planned such a wonderful day full of swimming—pirates and things. But Tom Sawyer was a clever imp and he not only managed so that the other boys did the whitewashing—but he got those same victims to pay him for allowing them to do the work.

It is the most famous story in the world—every man knows it—every man has lived it—but only Mark Twain could tell it—for to sympathetic understanding of man and boy he added the pen of genius.

MARK TWAIN

is the greatest American who ever put pen to paper. The San Francisco Bulletin said only a few days ago—"Without his influence, it is not too much to say, American humor would be far different from what it is. Millions have read his books. Perhaps America itself would be different itself if it were not for his influence. Looking backward upon his period he seems an inevitable phenomenon. American history would not be complete without him. There HAD to be a Mark Twain, just as there had to be an Abraham Lincoln."

And an American home without his work is as empty as an American history would be without Lincoln. And now the price of his books must be raised. We don't like to do it. We'd like forever to keep on putting these marvelous volumes of joy and tears into American homes at the low price Mark Twain liked. But we have no control over the price of the paper and cloth that go into these books. Already the prices of these have gone to nearly double what they used to be—and yet the price of the books has remained low. But we cannot keep it down any longer; and in a few days Mark Twain's works must be sold at a higher price.

Whose Job Is The Harder?

After a cheery breakfast you are off to your business and return again weary at night to find a steaming dinner awaiting you.

Little does your wife realize the hard bludgeonings of a man's business day. Equally little do you know of the hundred and one things that go on behind the scenes in your household in order that it may be an efficient and cheerful home for you.

You are interested only in the results—that your coffee is good, not what percolator your wife uses; that your house is clean, not what vacuum cleaner made it so. "You should worry" about where the receipt of that wonderful dessert came from. You get the benefit, and that's enough.

That perplexing question in your daughter's musical education—it was answered by an expert. The result is all you are interested in.

Yet the children's clothes did not plan themselves. Your wife's flower garden, which adds so much to the place, did not "just grow." When your bed-room was "done over," you were saved the expense of an interior decorator.

Perhaps you have not given much thought to the very difficult business of being a housewife. But for many years we have. The Delineator is a practical expert adviser on the perplexing problems of household affairs, depended upon and trusted in by more than a million progressive American homes. Without it such efficiency and economy in these homes would be impossible.

The Delineator tells the housewife all that modern science and art know about foods. It gives her constantly the newest ideas on home furnishings and decorating; it supplies scientific information on the care and upbringing of children; it makes it possible for women to make their own and their children's clothing. In The Delineator there are twenty-five regular departments, each conducted by an expert.

Thousands of progressive women write us each month for advice on home problems and each one receives a personal reply from an expert qualified to give counsel.

The reason for The Delineator's extraordinary influence in a million homes is no secret. The answer is Service.

Take advantage of this service for your home. Let The Delineator save dollars in your household and bring hours of happy entertainment each month to the whole family.

PRACTICING TAKING OVER A CONQUERED TRENCH—The American troops in training in France go through drill as much like actual trench fighting as is possible to make it. Here they have followed artillery fire, by breaking through barbed wire entanglements, and are invading an "enemy" trench, bayonets bared for hand to hand fighting.

Millions of Feet Never Have a Corn

It's a Needless Deformity

This is to people who still suffer painful and unsightly corns. It is to say that joyful hours need not be wrecked in this way. And pretty feet need never be made ugly.

Millions of people know this, and corns are a banished nuisance. You can prove it by a moment's effort. And from that hour you'll say good-bye to corns.

Not in These Ways

But you can't do that by paring. That's a risky operation, and it never ends a corn.

You cannot do it by old-time treatments, harsh and inefficient. They are too uncertain. Soreness too often follows.

You need not do it in a mussy way. Or in any way that affects the healthy tissue. No scientist will recommend such methods.

The One Right Way

A well-known chemist, after studying corns for some 25 years, invented Blue-jay. He selected Bauer & Black, who are world-famed makers of surgical dressings, to carry his method out.

It comes in an ideal form. A pad protects the corn while the method acts, so the pain stops instantly. The wonderful wax which ends the corn is centered on the corn alone. A thin adhesive strip holds all in place and makes the wrapping comfortable.

Blue-jay is applied in a jiffy. Then you forget the corn. The bit of wax gently undermines the corn. Within two days the whole corn can be removed. Some old tough corns require a second application—about one corn in ten. But the results are certain. No corn can resist this method.

B&B Blue-jay
Corn Plasters

Stop Pain Instantly
End Corns Completely
25c Packages at Druggists

Prove This Tonight

Prove these facts, if you have a corn, before another day. It will mean perpetual freedom. After that, at the first sign of a corn, you will place a Blue-jay on it. And that will mean its finish, before it even starts to hurt.

Every month millions of corns are being ended this way. And the time must come when this will be the universal method.

Don't wait longer. Watch the results on one corn. Then you will laugh at corns.

BAUER & BLACK, Makers of Surgical Dressings, Etc.
Chicago and New York

How Blue-jay Acts

A is a thin, soft pad which stops the pain by relieving the pressure.

B is the B&B wax, which gently undermines the corn. Usually it takes only 48 hours to end the corn completely.

C is rubber adhesive which sticks without wetting. It wraps around the toe, and makes the plaster snug and comfortable.

Blue-jay is applied in a jiffy. After that, one doesn't feel the corn. The action is gentle, and applied to the corn alone. So the corn disappears without soreness.

Do You Hear As Easily As This?

There is no longer any need for you to hear imperfectly, for straining to hear or being conspicuous in any way. Over a quarter million deaf people are now hearing clearly with the Acousticon.

And since the perfecting of our new 1918 Acousticon—smaller, better, and just as strong as ever, it is no more noticeable than in the above picture.

There is no need, either, to take any of these statements without proof. We have always been willing to prove what the Acousticon will do in each individual case, without a cent of expense to the user. That's the reason we have over a quarter of a million enthusiastically satisfied customers now.

Just write us saying, "I am hard of hearing and will try the Acousticon." We will send you, delivery charges paid, the 1918

Acousticon for the Deaf

For Ten Days' FREE TRIAL

No Deposit—No Expense

All we ask is that you give it a fair trial in your own home and amid familiar surroundings. Then there can be no doubt of whether it improves your hearing.

If it does not do so, we want it back without a cent of expense to you for the trial, because we know it is good business policy to have none but satisfied and enthusiastic customers—that's the only kind we now have. Write for your FREE TRIAL today.

ALSATIAN REFUGEES NOW IN THIS COUNTRY—The Misses Lydia and Janet Blumenthal, daughters of Daniel Blumenthal, who was mayor of Colmar until deposed by the invading Germans, fled to France at the outbreak of the war. The names of their family, they say, were on the German blacklist as favoring the French. They are now in the United States.

For the Active Body and Mind!

Wherever you find action you will find real appreciation for Dyer's Beans. Active men need fuel food—food that stores energy, that builds up and assimilates quickly. Food that has all the properties to maintain health!

Men training men know this! Nothing so certainly signifies victory as the man and his mind—men and their muscles. The strong, keen, active and alert always win!

"You'll need less of Meats & Vegetables if you say Runkel's"

"Think before you buy"—that's our Food Administrator's warning. And the response from the American Housewife is simply splendid!

Over Half a Million thoughtful housewives find in Runkel's a mighty efficient and pleasant way to help conserve the Nation's foods. Runkel's, you see, is so rich in food-value that it gives more nourishment and sustenance than most meats and vegetables. Try it yourself today—serve a little less of meats and vegetables, but add a cup or two of Runkel's. You'll find that your meal goes JUST AS FAR—and that it costs you LESS, besides.

That "chocolaty" taste of Runkel's is so delicious, so different from the "thin," insipid taste of other cocoas, that ever after they'll all ask you to say Runkel's to your grocer.

If your grocer hasn't Runkel's on hand today, send us his name and 10c for Family Taste Size (16 cups)—or 25c for 40-cup size.

"Book of Tasty Things"—containing delicious recipes suggested by Emil Panchard, famous chef of the Hotel McAlpin, New York, and tested by "Good Housekeeping Institute"—will be sent free on request.

Lessons in coffee making by the world's greatest coffee merchants

Try these recipes and paste them in your cook book

These are the recipes recommended by Arbuckle Bros. as the best ways of making Yuban. Ever since the Civil War, Arbuckle Bros. have been in the coffee business. In their testing room they try the various ways of making coffee. Their expert coffee making department will be glad to assist you if you do not obtain the right results.

The plain ordinary way

Use one heaping dessert-spoonful of clean-cut ground Yuban to each cup of water. Put the coffee in the pot and pour over it the fresh water briskly boiling; let the coffee steep five or ten minutes over a low heat or flame, but do not boil. Settle with a dash of cold water.

Drip coffee

Drip coffee may be made in a drip pot provided with a muslin cloth, a metal or porcelain dripper, or with filter paper. It may also be filtered through a muslin or linen cloth into a plain china pot.

If a drip pot with a cloth is used, allow a heaping teaspoonful of Yuban, pulverized, to each cup of fresh water briskly boiling. Re-drip two or three times when stronger coffee is desired.

If a metal dripper or filter paper is used, allow one heaping dessert-spoonful of Yuban clean-cut ground to each cup of fresh water briskly boiling. Allow the water to remain on coffee about five minutes to steep before releasing.

Percolator coffee

Use a heaping dessert-spoonful of clean-cut ground Yuban to each cup of fresh cold water. Pour the water in the percolator, then place coffee in the regular filter or basket—let the water percolate over the coffee five or ten minutes, depending upon the temperature of the heat. With electric percolator take fifteen to eighteen minutes.

Yuban comes in the whole bean, in clean-cut ground, or pulverized. Yuban clean-cut ground is primarily adapted for the percolator and the plain coffee pot method. It is recommended for the drip methods that do not use cloth filtration. With cloth filtration method use Yuban pulverized. Yuban clean-cut ground and pulverized have gone through a process in the grinding that insures uniform results.

Try Yuban made according to any of these recipes. You will find Yuban an economical coffee. One pound will produce from sixty to sixty-five cups. Yuban produces a delicious rich cup of coffee with an individual character that distinguishes it from all other coffees. Try Yuban your favorite way today.

Blemished Skins

How to clear them

In trying to rid your skin of blemishes and unsightly spots, have you reckoned with the most frequent cause of these troubles?

Skin specialists are tracing fewer and fewer troubles to the blood — more to bacteria and parasites that are carried into the pores of the skin with dust, soot and grime. The following local treatment will clear your skin of any blemishes caused by this most powerful and persistent enemy.

Just before retiring, wash in your usual way with Woodbury's Facial Soap and warm water, finishing with a dash of cold water. Then dip the tips of your fingers in warm water and rub them on the cake of Woodbury's until they are covered with a heavy "soap cream." Cover each blemish with a thick coat of this and leave it on for ten or fifteen minutes. Then rinse very carefully with clear, hot water, then with cold.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is the work of a skin specialist. Repeat this cleansing, antiseptic treatment with it every night until the blemishes disappear.

Use Woodbury's regularly thereafter in your daily toilet. This will make your skin so strong and active that it will resist the frequent cause of blemishes and keep your complexion free from them.

A 25c cake of Woodbury's is sufficient for a month or six weeks of this treatment and daily use. Get a cake today and bring at once to your skin that greater clearness, freshness and charm you have longed for. Woodbury's is for sale by druggists and toilet counters everywhere throughout the United States and Canada.

Write Today for a Week's Size Cake

For 4c we will send you a sample cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap large enough to last for a week of any Woodbury treatment, together with the booklet "A skin you love to touch," which gives a list of skin troubles and the treatment suited to each. COURTENAY FOOTE is the name of this dark young gentleman with the temperamental eyes. Mr. Foote, with pendulum-like regularity, reverts from stage to screen and back again. At present he is not located in films.

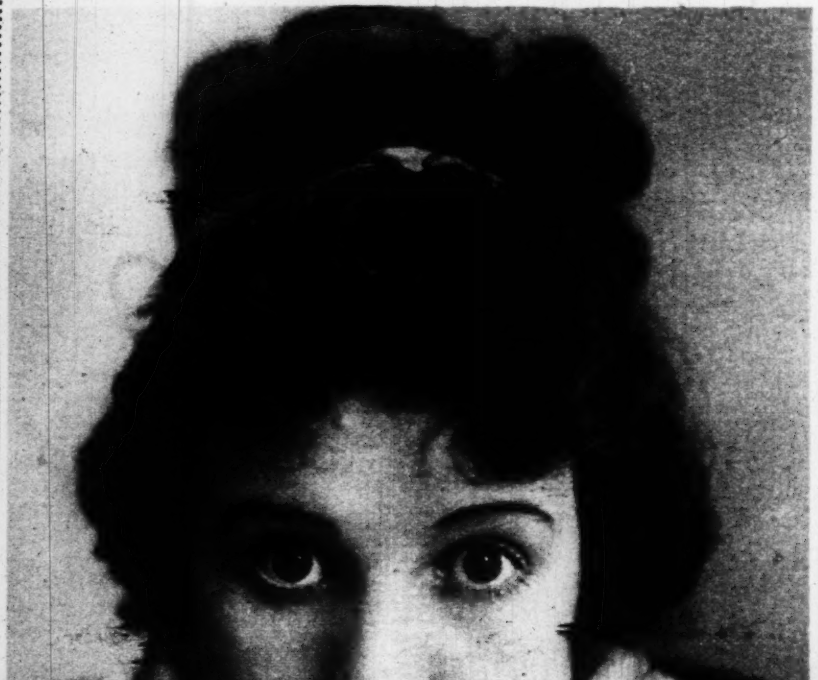
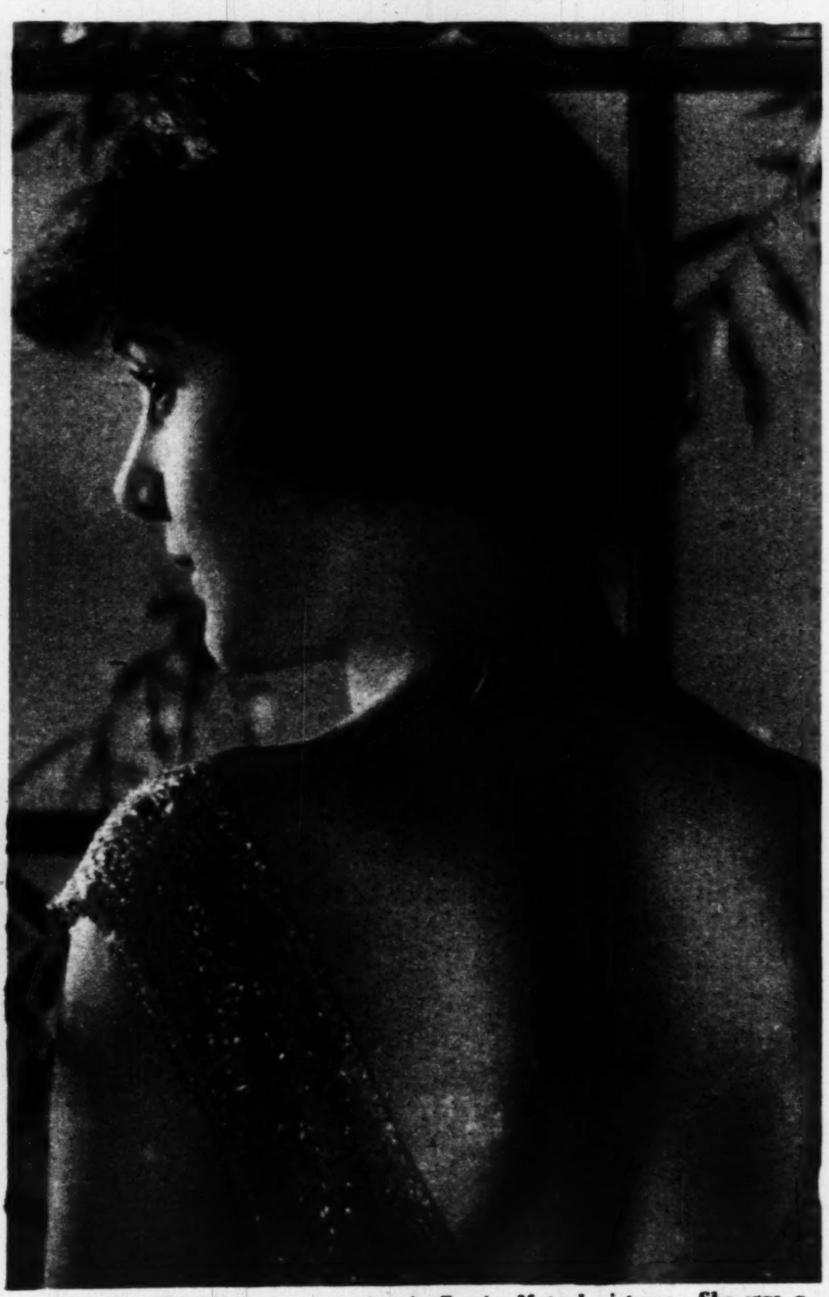
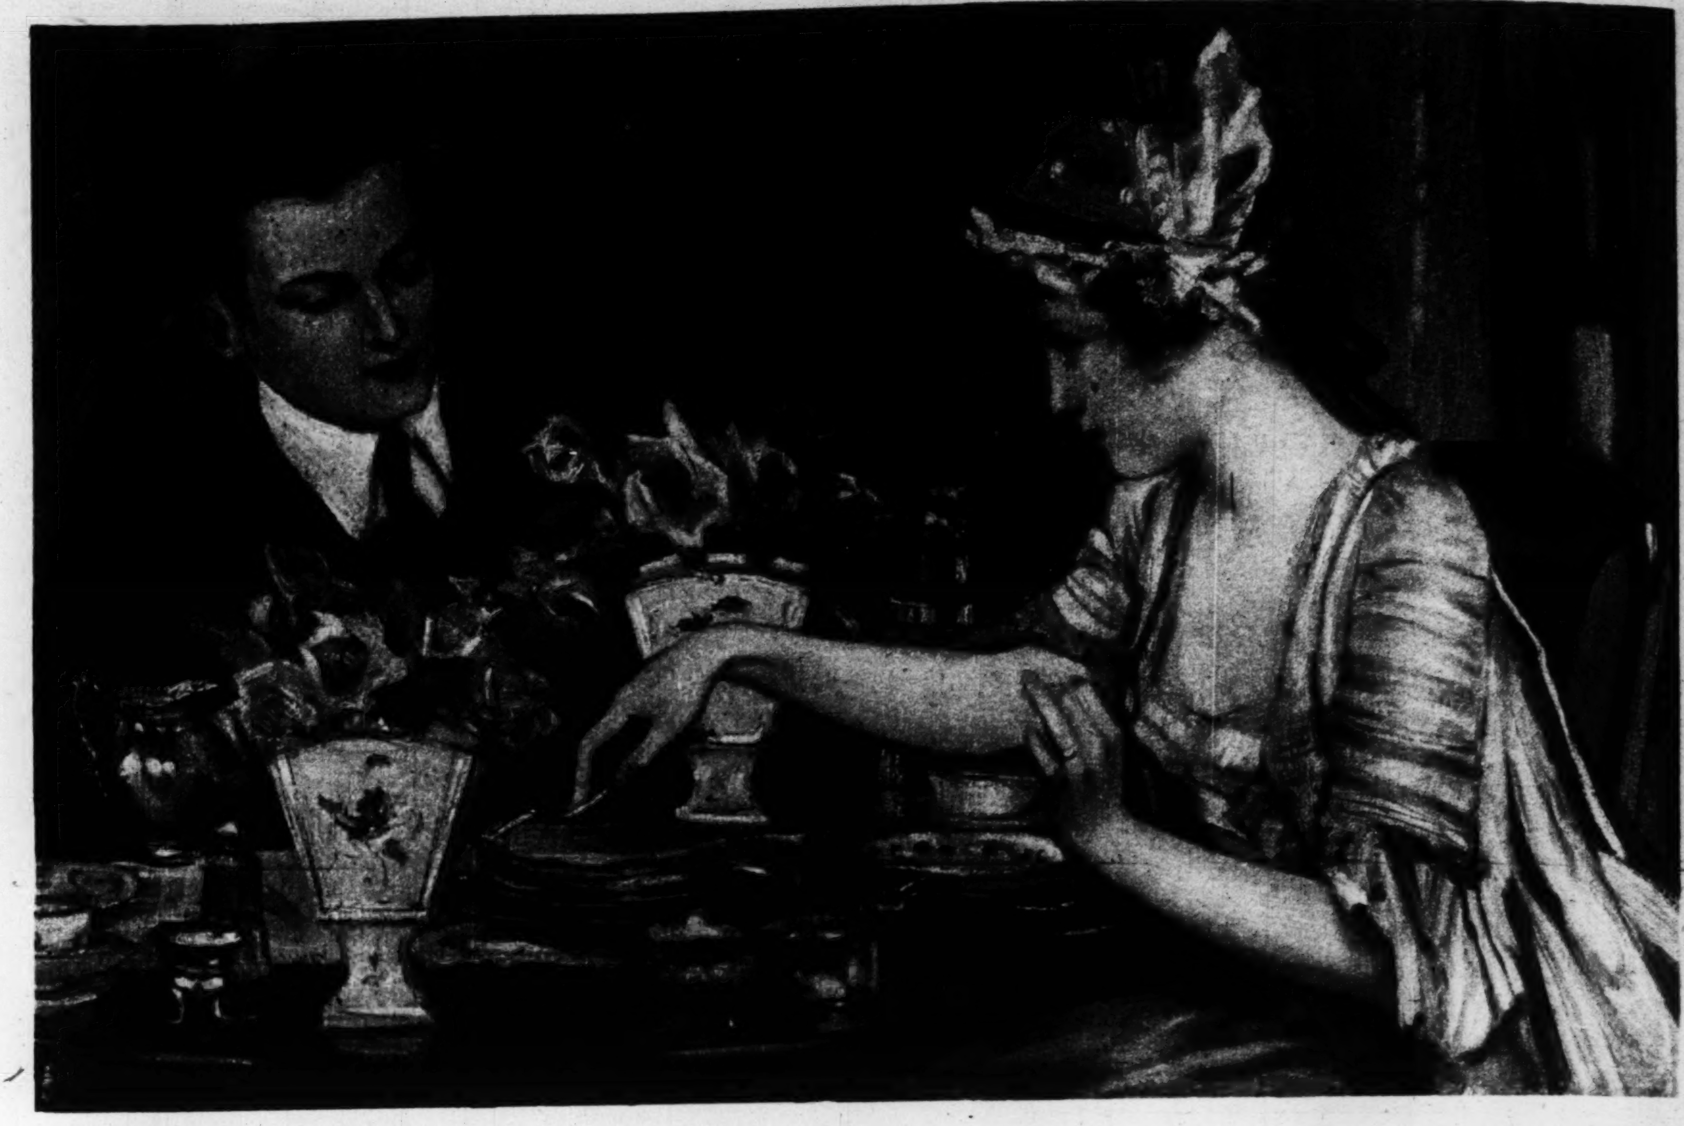
JANE COWL, we prophesy, after having seen her in her debut picture for Goldwyn, " The Spreading Dawn," will be just as popular a screen artist as she was on the legitimate stage.



SONIA MARKOVA, Fox's newly acquired star, would quite probably have been shining on high ere now had not her knowledge of swimming helped her get to shore after a fall into the ocean during the filming of a scene for "The Painted Madonna."



ANN MURDOCK is now starring in Empire-Mutual pictures. She was a Frohman star for several seasons, then succumbed to "the lure" of pictures and after trying out several companies drifted into her present harbor.



"The cleverest little bride in the world"

THAT is what this young husband says over his steaming pancakes.

He asks: "How did you get such a wonderful cook—from the South? Surely only the old-time cooks of the South know how to make pancakes like these!"

But the little bride smiles—she knows that Cook is no genius. She knows that she is "a clever little bride" only because she is wise enough always to order Aunt Jemima Pancake Flour!

Thousands and thousands of other little brides started housekeeping with Aunt Jemima. They used it first because it was so easy to make pancakes, so easy to have them always a success. They are still using Aunt Jemima because the family likes the flavor so much better than that of any other pancakes. Today Aunt Jemima pancakes are so popular, so universally enjoyed that last season alone 60 million Aunt Jemima breakfasts were served.

Why they taste so much better

The Aunt Jemima flavor is due to a special formula — an old recipe, famous, long tested and impossible for any home cook to duplicate.

You could not buy the ingredients separately. Each ingredient is especially selected with the experience, the study of years behind it. Each is especially prepared to make perfect pancakes. And the ingredients are blended with skill and accuracy in a scientific laboratory.

Even the milk is mixed right in the flour. The Aunt Jemima people go to great trouble and expense to evaporate the moisture from sweet milk and blend it carefully with the other ingredients. Though you add nothing but water, your cakes have the full, rich flavor that only sweet milk can give.

It is the special formula, the special ingredients that give Aunt Jemima pancakes their remarkable flavor.

These pancakes are perfect every time

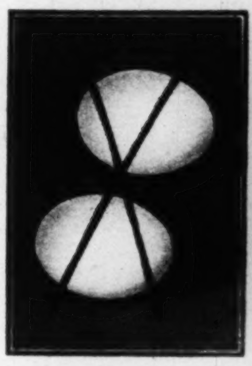
Never again need you be disappointed in your pancakes. They can be perfect every time. With Aunt Jemima Pancake Flour failure is impossible. All you have to do is to measure out the flour and mix in the water. Nothing could be easier. Nothing could be so certain of success! With Aunt Jemima you can have pancakes that are appetizing and delicious, each morning you serve them.

A wonderful saving in time—and money

You can get an Aunt Jemima breakfast in a jiffy. Just add water and your batter is ready for the hot griddle. By the time your coffee is made the delicious Aunt Jemima pancakes can be steaming on the table.

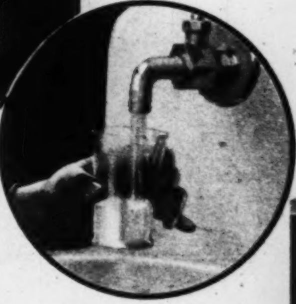
And what an inexpensive meal! You can serve this wonderfully delicious breakfast for less than 3c a person. Contrast this with the price of meat or eggs and you will see one reason why women served Aunt Jemima breakfasts 60 million times last year.

Take advantage of the experience of this little bride and of thousands of other women. Order either Aunt Jemima Pancake Flour or Aunt Jemima Buckwheat Flour. Serve the pancakes that have the flavor your husband will praise morning after morning.



So rich you need add no eggs

The milk is already in it



Just add water and your cakes have wonderful flavor

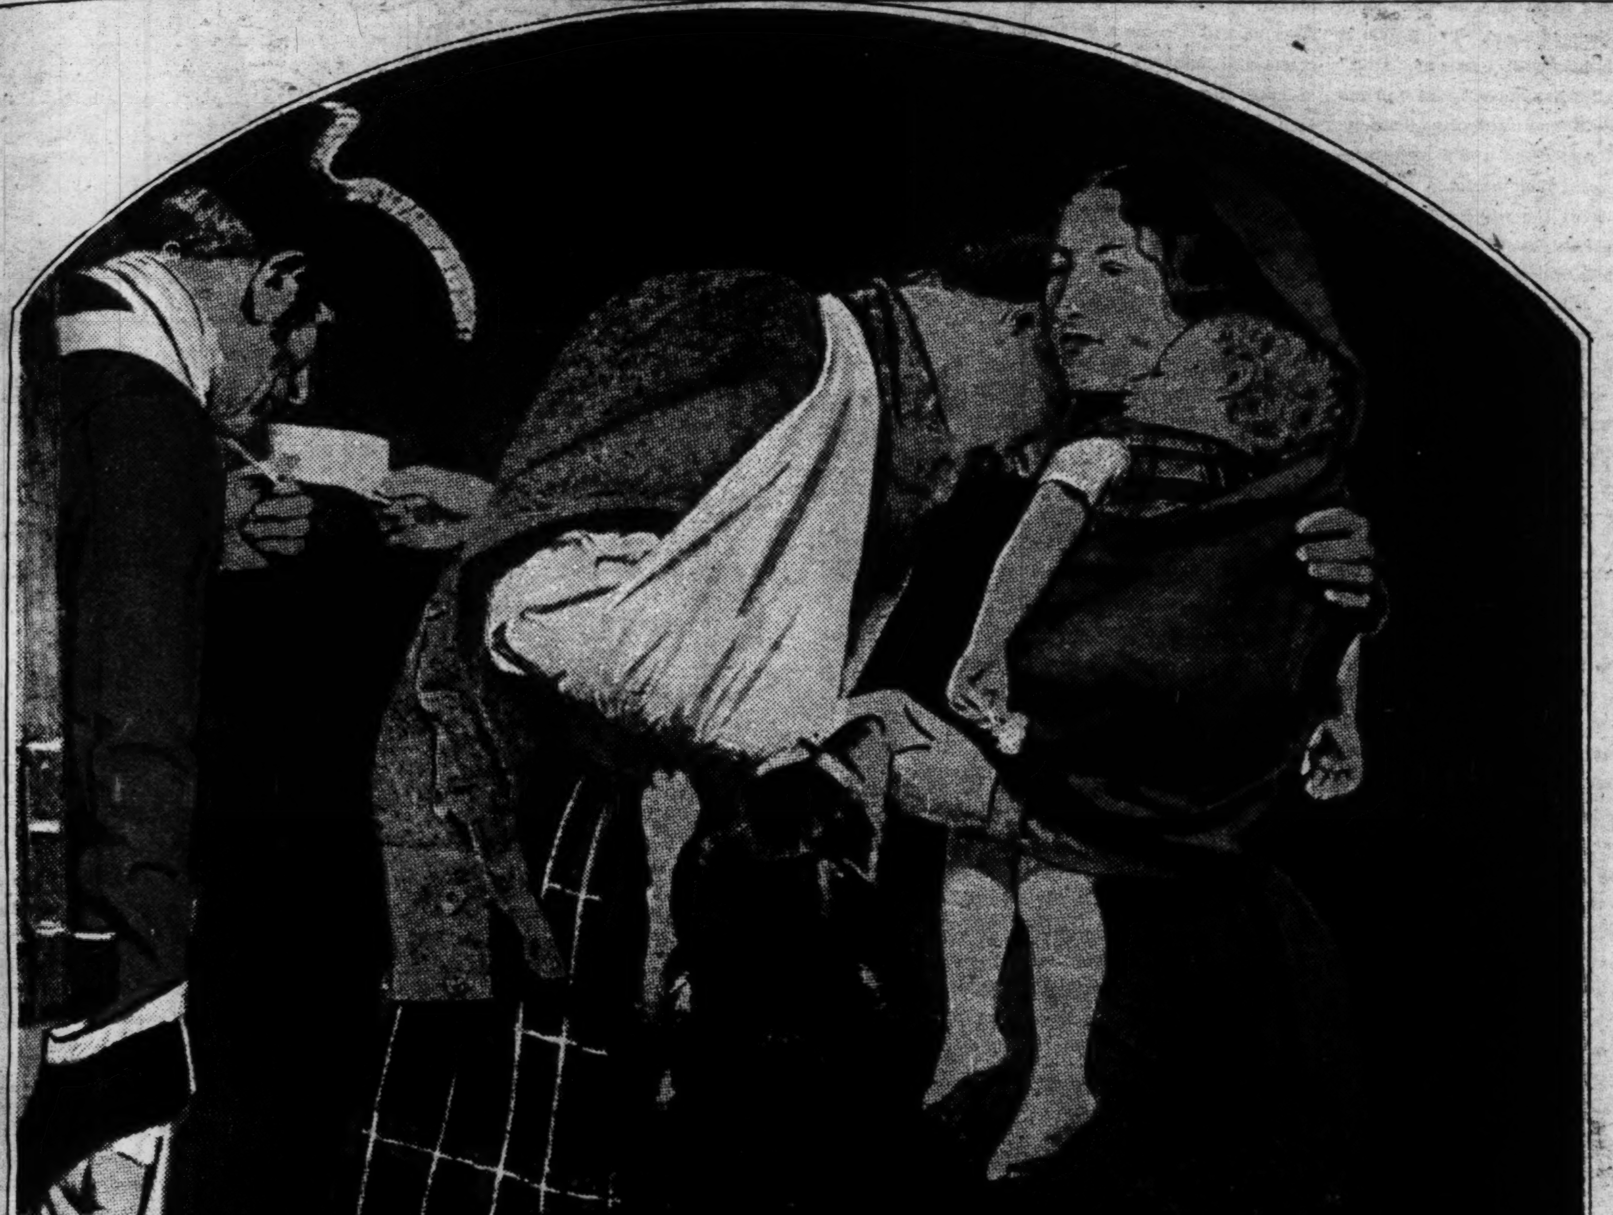
The ORDER of RELEASE painted by Millais



BY LOUISE JAMES BARGELT.

"The Order of Release," by Sir John Everett Millais, Bart., P. R. A. Tate Gallery, London, (1829-1896).

THE romantic sympathy of the young Millais for the Jacobites is evidenced here in his vivid picturing of the release of a Highland clansman, imprisoned after the battle of Culloden for complicity in the cause of the youthful pretender. Millais, only 24 at the painting of this canvas, was in the first flush of his pre-Raphaelite passion for the realistic verities. As a piece of strong, realistic work and for its powerful rendering of expression and emotion it is among the masterpieces of the British school.

In every light and shadow of the picture is the stamp of actual truth. There have been many who have censored the pre-Raphaelites for their seemingly willful preference of ugliness to beauty. It was one of their principles that there should be no conventional selection of pretty models merely because they were pretty, and the child in the woman's arms here is a characteristic point. The little features are even ugly, defiantly, uncompromisingly "Hieland."

It is interesting to know that Lady Millais, who was two years after the painting of this picture to become the artist's wife, posed for the canvas. This picture of her is deemed one of Millais' best pieces of portrait work.

The GOAT

His Fury When Aroused Was the Terrible Fury of a Patient Man—and He Was Aroused.

ACTORS, being of a kind that draws the substance of life from display, applause, "front," title, and artificial distinction, enforce upon one another most rigorous subdivisions of caste. The public is prone to juggle lightly such terms as "star," "leading woman," "headliner," and "prima donna," but to the actors such classifications are of deadly differentiation and significance, for they are ranks in their realm.

And an actor lives for what other actors think of him—rather, for what other actors must think of him, for an actor gives another actor only what that other actor already has. One will not acknowledge that another is capable of a trying or heavy rôle until the other has that rôle and holds it. And an actor would rather jam such knowledge down another actor's throat and tear such acknowledgment from his throat than draw the most ringing encomiums from critics. It is an axiom in the "business" that no performance is ever given with the vim and effort which marks a professional matinée, when actor shows off to actor. Actors spend probably a million dollars a year in trade papers, advertising to other actors, who can do them no good. For every "At liberty" ad, seeking an engagement, there are fifty "Booked solid" cards, crowing.

All this engenders class feeling. The "legitimate" player makes bold to scorn the vaudevillian; the vaudeville performer snubs the burlesquer; the burlesque "hick" spurns the circus talent. The star demands a stateroom when traveling and a dressing room apart from the supporting mob. The headliner demands that her or his name be like Abou ben Adhem's, leading all the rest and in larger type; it need not be large, but it must be larger than the others'.

The titles are not arbitrary. They are fixed by technical usages. A star, for example, is one whose name precedes the title of a play, as "Tillie Toodles in 'Tessie's Toothbrush.'" Were it, however, "'Hello, Hoboken,' with Hank Hawkins," Hank would be featured, not starred. Some stars become stars because they deserve it; others find ways to bring about theatrical knighthood through influence or other circumstances. A knowing manager once defined a star as a player who can succeed in a bad play. He was right. When a player's name is more valuable than what he plays in he is a star. There are probably two such in America. And there are 192 billboard made stars in the two dollar world and probably 1,992 former chambermaids, graduated chorus girls, good looking extra girls, and beautiful shoe clerks starred in the movies.

A headliner is, as has been pointed out, one only whose name must by contractual provision lead all other names on any bill. A leading woman is one who plays a "straight" part in either a drama or musical comedy, and she takes precedence over the soubrette, the comedienne, or the ingénue unless one of those is starred.

And so on, down the gamut, these grades are set and absolute, and a private in a show can no more outshine a general in a show than could one in the most autocratic army on earth.

In this tale we are to deal with the lowliest of the stage churls—the animal actor.

Ever since men have donned the skins of beasts to impersonate them behind footlights they have been socially and professionally, though not always financially, classed with the brutes whose hides they wear. Their faces are never seen by the public. They may develop extraordinary art in characterizing the quadrupeds and they may be invaluable in dramatic or comedy results. But they are animal actors, and they might as well be white wings or chimney sweepers or trunk handlers. A monologist who wears evening clothes at matinées and makes noises resembling the sounds of birds and beasts may be an aristocrat—a headliner or a star, in fact. But he who wears the lion's skin is the jackass of the fable.

Billy Cole was such. For years he had played in vaudeville and in musical shows. How he had become a portrayer of dogs and tigers and monkeys no one else knew and he scarcely remembered. But he had become identified with the specialty, and whenever a producer needed an animal actor he thought first of Billy and offered him a liberal wage to come on with horns or fur. When he wasn't "with a show" he cavorted on all fours in the varieties, drew children to the afternoon performances, and pocketed goodly shekels.

Thus was he welcome in booking offices and in theaters, for he was a "draw" and an able craftsman. But among his fellows in the actors' societies, which grudgingly let him pay dues and play at benefits for the widows of deceased indigents who wouldn't talk to him while they lived, he was a social leper, an ox with professional hoof and mouth disease.

Billy did not grieve about this. For one thing, he was used to it. For another, he hadn't been reared to preferment, being the son of a camel driver in a one night stand, sand lot circus. He had become a clown in boyhood and had worn grotesque animal garbs for rough comedy effects. Then he found himself when he put on a goatskin and the horns and whiskers of the male goat and butted his way to a raise, to recognition, out of the ring and onto a stage. He changed his spots now and then for the needs of a "production," but his opus majus remained the goat, and he was known as Billy the Goat to the entire trade before he was 25.

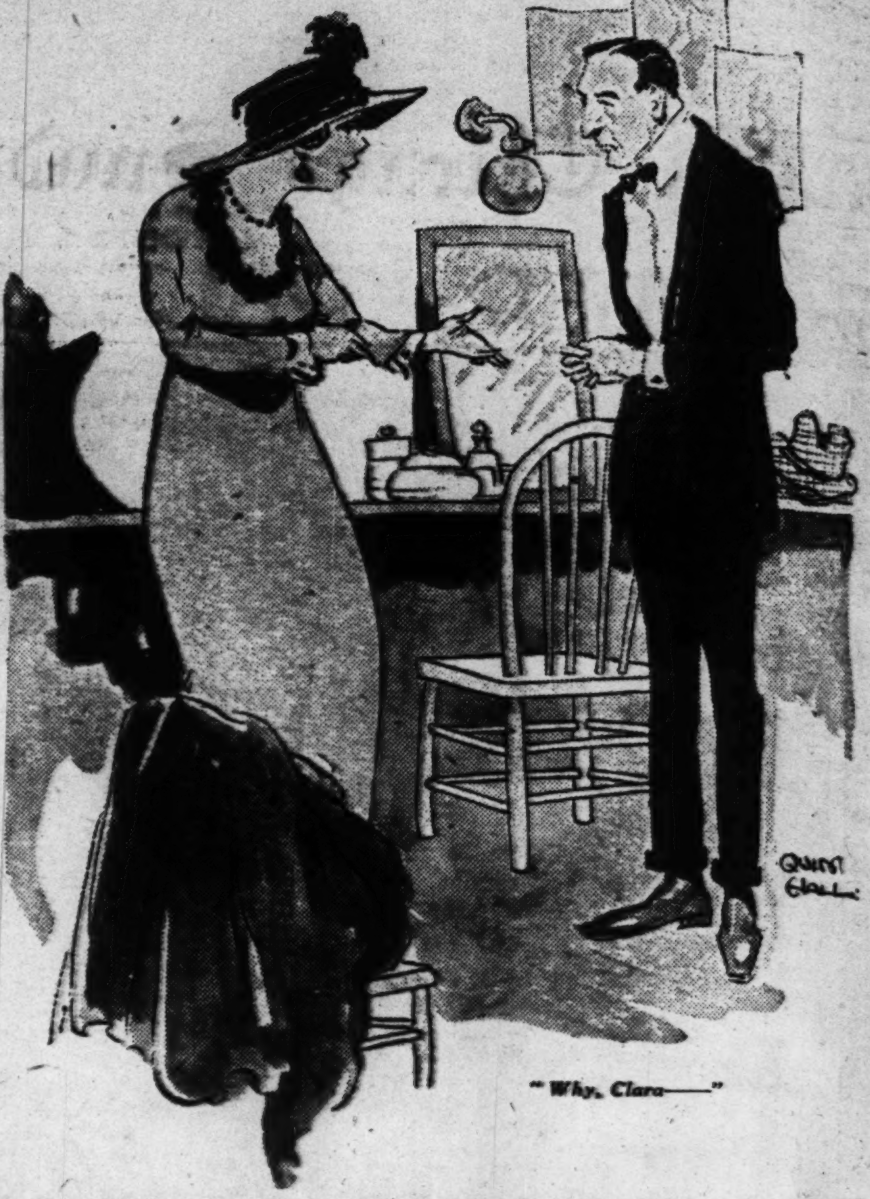
Billy lived in boarding houses on the road and in a little flat all alone when he was in New York, which he called home in preference to Anamosa, Ia., where he was born and where his old parents had settled down to live out their lives and to live off their talented son. He never failed them with the weekly money order. He sent them his "notices" and clippings of his ads in the Christmas numbers of the theatrical papers, in which always appeared his picture in the goat makeup on one end and "straight," with his low collar and low forehead and his hair pitifully barbered, in the other, and in between the two cuts, "Billy Cole, Always Working, in his Famous Specialty, 'Animals I Have Met,' featuring his exclusive impersonation, 'Hogan's Goat.'"

The Goat was spending a season in vaudeville and was playing the tour of New York, where there are as many theaters as there are in all the millions of square miles west of the Mississippi. He paid his booking agent 5 per cent of his salary, as is the custom, and the agent looked after his contracts, sent lobby photographs ahead of him to the theaters, held his mail for him, and regarded him as a first rate "act." Billy stepped into the office in a big building facing Longacre square to exchange earfuls with his vaudeville broker, and as he entered he heard that gentleman speaking in most ungentle tones to a shivering little pale faced girl who had evidently been annoying the agent by persistently seeking a chance on the stage.

"How many times d'I hafto tell you when I want you I'll send after you?" he shouted. "Now you get out o' this office an' stay out. I can't have every amachoor on eart' runnin' in an' out o' here, botherin' me. Now you——"

"Wait a minute," said Billy. "What does the li'l girl want?"

The agent looked up and saw it was his steady patron. The girl looked up out of scared eyes and saw it was a man with a big diamond in his ready tied teck cravat and two gold teeth brightly shining.



"Why, Clara——"

"Aw, this here kid comes runnin' in an' out o' here till she's got me dizzy," explained the booker. "The reformers keep hollerin' that girls ain' safe aroun' theattical offices an' that we lure 'em an' everything. Well, I can't keep 'em out o' here. Now, this one——"

"Did you ever work on a stage?" asked Billy.

The girl nodded that she had not.

"Sit down here an' wait a minuit," said Billy, as he motioned her to a place on the bench of little hope where the waiting out-of-work actors sit and bite their nails and envy Eva Tanguay, and he took the agent by the arm and led him within. When they came forth, ten minutes afterward, the agent was protesting:

"I tell you, Billy, you're stoxin' up a lot o' grief for nothin'. The act is goin' swell, it's booked consec'tive at fancy dough, the mannigers is tickled stiff wit' it—what more d'ye want? Now you wanna saddle yerself up wit' a girl. It's takin' a chancet for nothin'—for nothin'."

"I know what I'm doin'," answered Billy, with enthusiasm. "Don' I know how far a animal actor can go? Well, I've gone the distance. I can't get no further—alone. But wit' a pretty gal, if she can do anything, say! No, sir—I'll give her a tryout, an' if she's there at all she goes in the act."

And he turned to the girl and gave her a card.

"Meet me 10 o'clock tomorrer mornin' in that hall, there, an' I'll have a piana player an' we'll see if you got anything. An' if you can put on a song or if you can put over a dance or if you got pelsonality an' can do comedy, you're booked."

And he went along.

Before noon next day the skinny little amateur, immature daughter of a sore fingered seamstress by the day, had a job. She had been tried and Billy had been found wanting her. She could sing fairly well in a thin, ingenuous way that had the charm to the Goat of a diva's genius. She could dance angularly and against all the rules of technique, but it looked to the Goat like the mellifluous sailing through air of Genee. She spoke a piece and he said it was funny: it was—it was ridiculous.

So he set her head spinning when he engaged her at $25 the week and advanced her fifty for wardrobe. He ordered a series of rehearsals daily thereafter, and within three weeks they had worked up a routine in which Clara Henneberry was to cavort on with him, playing a little girl in a garden, and he was to butt her for humorous effect until she reached down stage center, where she would sing a song and he would execute pantomime in his goatish way; she would then exit and he would do his eight minutes of acrobatic tumbling and standing on his horns, imitating the throat noises of the goat, make a tin can disappear as though he were eating it (always a scream in any spot on any program!) and exit; she would then come on, having made a "change" (switched costumes), and would sing a solo Scotch "number," "going into" a highland fling on the "repeat" chorus, when he would enter made up as a burro and she would ride him off.

The booking agent sent word several times that the managers were protesting almost unanimously—he had a standard act as it was, and they did not want him to chance any innovations. But Billy Cole had a grain of stamina, and he said he would play his new idea or go over to England, where he had been before and had made good, and where they'd take him in any act he wanted to show. So the agent sighed and swore and puffed and argued and induced the theaters to try Billy with the girl. The offering was accordingly scheduled for the Fourth Avenue theater, a downtown house of minor consequence, where the managers could gather and see the product.

Clara was so nervous that she almost fainted before their music began to vamp. But Billy, the old stager, shot her full of assurances and last second advice, and capered on as the trembling child followed and stood staggered by her first footlights.

Billy the Goat worked as never before in all his career had he tried. The girl sang in her juvenile voice and danced her awkward steps. The act rang down to huge applause—vociferous payment to Billy for having outdone himself. The Goat from one entrance and the stupefied child from the other, bowed and bowed and bowed.

The booking agent thumped the managers on the backs. Was it rotten? Was it? He guessed not. It was a hit. It was a "riot."

"Say—they took eight bends," cried the agent. Bends are bows; in vaudeville the value of an act, or at least degree with which it "goes" is often judged by the number of bows which the actors "take." Therefore they frequently force the bows. One juggling comedian when asked to "cut" his act to fifteen minutes answered, "I can't—I bow six minutes."

. . . .

The managers were not deceived. They saw that the girl was gawkish, but they saw, too, that Billy was far and away beyond anything he had ever been before, and the difference was in favor of the act. So they gave "Billy Cole and Girl" the route that had been assigned Billy Cole originally, and every one was satisfied. Every one was satisfied except Billy, who was delighted, and Clara, who was intoxicated with the realization that she was an "actress."

Of course Billy was in love with Clara. Vaudeville partners, where they are of opposite sexes, are almost always either in love with each other or are each other's ex-husband and ex-wife, having been in love with each other.

Women had not played a leading rôle in the serio-comic drama which had been Billy's life. He had met many—wise and hard ones, prosperous and struggling ones, cocksure and timid ones, illiterate and shabby genteel ones, winsome and forbidding ones. But he was an animal actor "on" and a red necked vulgarian "off," and somehow the women who indicated that they might listen to the bleat of the Goat did not get under his hide. Women out of "the profession" he never met, except a waitress now and then or some other transitory figure whom he passed in his ambulating course.

But when he saw Clara, neither in the business enough to be of it nor so entirely out of it that he could not decently rub shoulders with her, the heart of the Goat bumped and fluttered. He had not tricked her into vaudeville so that he might make love to her. The Goat was no beast. His intentions were honest. He would "make" her professionally. For that he would ask her to marry him. If she said she would he would be her husband; if she said no she could go along with him anyhow.

Before the new "team" left town Billy proposed. Clara had not been on the stage long enough to understand that he was of the undermost stratum. She knew that he was powerful enough to do for her what no one else of her acquaintance had been able to accomplish; she knew that he was rich, as she judged wealth; she saw that he was kind and that he had not tried to kid her or kiss her when he had her at a disadvantage; she itched to wear on her finger the huge diamond that he flashed in his tie, and she was canny enough to foresee that if he married her he would go through with her and for her in her wild ambitions for the stage career she craved. So she took him to her mother, who gave consent in a voice so weary that it could not have successfully have uttered a negative where a promise of surcease from labor and from want was offered. And Billy and Clara were married and started for their honeymoon over the Orpheum circuit.

Marriage, an assured position in vaudeville, a clinch hold on an act that could always "get by," gave the girl confidence. Her work became stronger, she acquired poise and repose, she no longer quivered. She induced Billy to buy her dizzier and much costlier costumes, and she was no mean picture in them. She soon learned that while her husband was acceptable to the public he was non grata with his fellows. This puzzled her, but never grieved her. She did not propose to share the apathetic atmosphere which his work engendered. There was no rule of thumbs down against the wife and partner of an animal actor. So she went where he could not.

She early and easily absorbed the backstage ways and methods of thought. The fact that a few weeks earlier she had been an amateur without hope, without encouragement, without an ear into which to pour her unasked aspirations, did not deter her. Prosperity breeds forgetfulness. Security breathes arrogance. It wasn't long before she was charging him with "hogging" the stage and trying to "crab" her bows. They were all her bows now—to her.

Before the year was out she had bickered him into changing the title of the "billing" to Cole & Henneberry, and she had cut down his pantomiming to a minimum because, she said, it detracted from her song. She now rode him in as well as riding him out. She had introduced another solo song and dance for herself, and in her "patter" she made a reference or two to "my partner—the goat who's got my goat." It went for comedy with the "house," but the old time actors, who hadn't much love for Billy, and the old time stage hands, who had, read a metallic something in the words and whispered among themselves.

It wasn't long before Clara was openly telling other performers that she had made a terrible mistake—she so young, how was she to know? Here she was, just blooming into the fullness of her talents, alive with personality, admired and applauded "down front," with her life chucked away and her future destroyed by her tieing herself up to an animal actor. O, what a fool she had been!

Billy saw. Even a goat has two eyes.

He saw and he suffered. He said little, but his heart was tortured. He loved her. The worse her behavior the more, somehow, the more adoringly and worshipfully he loved her. He trembled at her peeves and he backed and cringed before her growing mastery. He worked harder than ever before, for he had a wild and pathetic hope that he might impress her with his "art," that she would reward him for faithful support—it had come to that, now he was supporting her; all that he did had been subordinated to "filler" and "feeder" for her songs and dances and "gags."

She had rounded out in other ways than stage ways, too, had Clara. Three meals a day and a future without threats of nowhere to go and no one to listen had pumped the pink into her cheeks and a beam into her eyes. She had met folks and mingled in affairs beyond the old life, where an argument with the corner grocer had been a high-light. She had good clothes to set off her maturing charms, and she had plenty of admirers behind Billy's back to swell her with attentions and insinuations.

It wasn't a hundred years before she bent to such an overture. A headliner caught her in the wings while poor Billy was gyrating himself lame trying to get as much into the four minutes that Clara now allowed him for his goat work as he formerly registered in six, and Clara heard words that set her a-tingle. She saw Billy exit and she heard her music. As she started for the stage she felt herself held a moment by the hand and a voice that was worth $2,000 a week whispered hurriedly:

"Shake that boob after the show tonight—I'll be at the Schlitz."

That night when the Goat had cold creamed his sore cheeks and donned his overcoat with the belt around it he went to his wife's dressing room. But it was locked. She had gone. He strolled to the hotel, shaking his head. He did not expect to find her waiting for him, and she wasn't. She was at a table in the Schlitz, drinking in the music of the headliner's voice and the headliner's words.

"Can't you see it?" he was saying. "That bum animal actor had been around the wheel so many times that his stuff was dying. Dumb acts can't keep putting on new stuff, like you, for instance, or like me. He was slipping and he knew it. The managers were getting cold on him. So he grabbed at you—a sweet, young, beautiful, talented girl—like a drowning man that can't swim at a life preserver. Now look at him—he's booked, he's getting big money—big for him, anyway—and he's strutting around telling people what a knockout he is. He! Why, he's living off you. Everybody says so. And it's a shame to see such beauty and such class and such talent shot away to keep a clumsy animal actor working. He's the Goat, eh? I think you're the goat."

When was there ever a girl, especially a girl whose bent was for the stage, deaf to such words as these, words from one who was distinguished, who ought to know, who appreciated her and thereby showed that he did know?

The words sank deep into Clara's tiny soul. After that she treated Billy not only not like a partner and husband, but like an enemy, a thief who was stealing away her heaven given genius and fattening himself on the fruits thereof. She found a ready ear on the great headliner, who frequently played on the same bills with Billy and Clara, and whose clandestine tete-a-tetes with her grew oftener and less clandestine, till the scandal was sung through all the walks of the rialto, the green room, and the players' clubs.

And one night, when the timid and panting, sighing, unresisting Billy ventured to importune her not to be too "raw," she turned on him.

"Who're you talking to, you ignorant hick?" she spat. "Here I've been slaving for you, carrying you along like a dead weight on my back, singing and dancing my head off for you, and you give me a line o' talk like that. This settles it. I'm through. Hear me? Through!"

"Why, Clara—"

"Don't 'why' me and don't 'Clara' me. You can go back to where you was when I found you—crawling around on your hands and knees, clowning. I've been wasting my life and my gifts on you because like a chump I married you. You took advantage of me because I was starving. You had me on the hip. If I hadn't married you you would of left me flat. It wasn't me I was thinking of, it was my mother, or I'd have slapped your face when you practically blackmailed me into marrying you. Well, now I don't need you. I've stepped out of your class. I was willing to go along and suffer and take the dirty end of it till now—but this is going too far. When you start bawling me out—you, a lowdown animal actor, to me, a reco'nized artist, even my patience gives out. Now you can wire the agent that he can book you single. I'm through the end of this week. I'm going out on my own—and I guess I can get away with it."

The Goat tried to stutter something. He tried at one and the same time to tell her that she was unjust to him, that he loved her more than he loved his work or his life or his honor or anything that she owed him a little gratitude, that he would waive all that and go on as long as she would let him be her goat—but nothing came out. Words were not Billy's star weapons. So he stood gagged and desperate-eyed as she flounced out of the room.

She played out the week, though she no longer shared his room. They never bandied a word through the remainder of the week. He hoped along that she had changed her mind; he could not entirely believe that she would really "blow" him, though he knew thousands of instances for precedents to argue that she would.

She did.

He gave her her share out of the envelope—for months they had been splitting "fifty-fifty"—and, as she had been doing for several days, she left the theater alone.

Billy hunted quietly through cafés and hotels almost all that night, but did not see her. She had "checked out" and left no word. He still had a final hope that she would "show up" on the train going to the next "stand" in the morning. But there was no Clara. She had gone to New York, the other way.

The Goat telegraphed his agent as follows:

"The wife is got a Charley horse and is got to be out of the act indef. Will do my old single at old salary if managers don't holler. Wire quick."

He got this answer:

"Clara brought her Charley horse in here. It's in her heart, that's where there's something the matter with her. She wants to go out in a act of her own. I told her she'd have to get some other agent. Nobody what throws you down can do any trade with me. Sure you can play the old one. It always was a hit. I squared it. Nobody squawked. Go ahead. I'm sorry for you, and yet I'm glad. Forget her, Billy, old cull. She ain't worth no regrets and everybody in show business says so."

So! Clara had "gone through" with her threat.

The Goat went along in his old, old way. Every week he sent his bit to his father and to Clara's mother, as had been his custom since his marriage. The added scoffing of the other actors, who pointed thumbs at him and jeered him behind his back for his Beauty and the Beast flight, meant little to a suffering soul not atrophied or calloused, but absorbent and with seemingly limitless capacity.

He winnowed the trade papers diligently for word of Clara's movements, but saw nothing until this item, under the heading of "New Acts," got his eye and almost put it out:

CLARA HENNEBERRY,
SONGS, 15 MIN.
FOURTH-AVENUE THEATER.

Miss Henneberry, formerly of Cole & Henneberry, tried out in her first venture as a single. She was charmingly gowned and her appearance was favorable to her venture. But that let her out. It takes more for a woman, alone before a curtain, with no scenery, no support, no props—nothing except her own ability and personality—to hold and entertain 1,500 people, than Miss Henneberry has or probably ever will have. Her voice is only fair, her dancing is commonplace. She got a few hand-claps of polite or sympathetic applause, such as always is given to a woman. But her offering was a complete "flop" nevertheless and her effort to tour the "big time" is hopeless if what she showed here is the best she can do. Most of the managers walked out before she had finished. As part of a regular act, with Cole, who has made good so long and often that he can hold up a lightweight partner, the girl contributed nothing to the vaudeville industry, but was carried along. Alone she hasn't a chance. She is only one of thousands of girls with fair looks and average voices who think the art is calling them and and who find out when they respond that they weren't sent for.

Billy read it again—and cried.

Then he wrote a telegram:

"Clara Henneberry, Fourth Avenue Theater, N. Y. C.—Now that you have been initiated, how'd you like to ride the goat? My back is still strong enough to hold up and my heart is still strong enough for you so I can forget. I need you bad. The act is been a bloomer since you blew, on the level. Say we're a couple of shines when we're split out and we're a knockout when we're together. So, when they convince you that you ain't getting a square chance out there, come back to your animal actor. BILLY."

His answer came "collect" on Saturday night, just as the week was closing:

"Billy Cole, Pilgrim theater, Boston—Can the bunk. I know you queered me with the papers because you give them ads, and with the managers because they been falling for your vulgar act so long. But I'll make good, don't worry. The paper lied. I was a hit. Don't let anybody kid you. You know I'm there. So go along and peddle your animal comedy in the sticks. I'll be headlining on Broadway when you're doing split weeks in Iowa. CLARA."

The Goat sat up with this insolent message for hours. He thought of revenge; he thought of humbling himself further in a last frantic effort to get her back; he thought—

He acted. He threw a few traps into his bag and ran for a train. He pulled up at the stage door of the Fourth Avenue. The old doortender, who knew him well, tried to hold him from entering Clara's dressing room. But Cole pushed him aside and threw open the door. Clara was taking off her make-up after the Sunday "sacred concert" and behind her, looking languishingly at her pretty features in the mirror, sat the two thousand-dollar tenor. Clara swung about with a how-dare-you look, but Billy took the headliner by the back of the collar and the waist band and threw him out into the cement corridor. Then he turned on Clara who was speechless with amazement.

"Come on," he roared. "I been the goat long enough. Now I'll be a gorilla a while. Now, you're through here and you flivvered. You're about the same success here as you are bein' a wife. But I made you in vaud'ville an' I'll make you in mat'mony. What's this?" and he picked up a new stage gown—"that don't belong in our act," and he tore it to strips. "An' that one, too," and he ribboned another one. "An' the next guy, in or out o' show biz, that I ketch lookin' slant eyed at you, I'll break 'im in half. Pack up—we open in Providence Mondy, an' we got some rehearsin' to do, cus this here foolin' aroun' is got you all out o' the routine. Get busy."

She choked. She tried to find a "come back." She looked at him again, square shouldered and masterful.

"Why, Billy," she said, "I never knew you were such a brute."

"Animal actors is nach'rel animals or they wouldn' get away wit' animal acts," he said. "I'm a low, vulgar hick, an' that's why I got to act that way wit' you. Animals they don' reason or argue—they bite an' butt an' kick an' bray. That's me. Now get a wiggle on you, your c'reer as the supporting comp'ny to Billy the Goat is givin' you the cue to come on an' do your li'l piece. An' no back gab, neither, or I'll—I'll—well, you never thought I'd t'row your kind frien' out by the neck, neither, so you prob'ly never figgered before that I'd use vi'lents towards anybody. But I'm full o' wallops today, an' I'm li'ble to get careless. Animals is so rough, anyways."

Clara leaped on him—and kissed him.

Cole & Henneberry had six "open" weeks the next season, because Mrs. Cole was in enforced retirement, during which the Goat never left her. Now she and the baby travel along with Daddy Billy, and Clara says she doesn't intend to act any more, and that Billy always could get by "single"—in vaudeville.

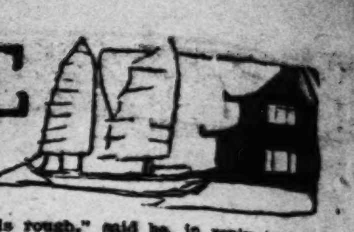
CHINESE for TROUBLE



by Samuel Merwin

Miss Austin Finds a Lot of It in Getting Out of Shanghai.

THE Chinese storekeeper counted out the great heap of gold sovereigns. It took quite a time. Then he swept them into a grimy canvas bag that had Chinese lettering on it in red, and tied the strings with reverential care. After which, with equal care, he opened the glass door behind him, and put away on a shelf the priceless old pottery camel that Miss Edith Austin had just sold him. The transaction was important, even for that street of important transactions, Nanking road, Shanghai.

The girl was surprised at the weight of the bag of gold. "Why," she cried, as she swung it off the counter, "it weighs pounds and pounds." And she laughed, with a pretty rush of color into her cheeks and a sparkle of sheer excitement in her hazel eyes. "I believe that dear old camel is the luckiest thing that ever happened to me!"

"Or the unluckiest," Mr. Henry Carpenter had on the tip of his tongue. But, being a shrewd, reflective man, an experienced observer of human beings on the coast, where they run rather wilder than common, he seldom let what was on the tip of his tongue get past his lips. And so he was silent now; he merely looked at the slim girl who had the attribute of pleasing and alarming him at the same time.

At the moment she was even more pleasing than usual—and more alarming. She wore a simple white frock, with a loose white serge coat drawn over it, high white shoes (in the British east, whatever the heat, pumps are unpardonable!) and a small hat with a green motoring veil caught up about it. Against the showcase leaned a long handled green parasol.

"And now," she observed, suddenly becoming briskly businesslike, "you and I must settle up. It was dear of you to help me. Let's see—I owe you for the steamer trunk, and all those things I had to buy, and my ticket to Naples——"

Another canvas bag was called for, and all of a pound and a half of the precious metal was transferred to the inside coat pocket of Mr. Carpenter, where it bulged perceptibly.

He was looking at her again, in that reflective way he had, with eyelids drooping a little. "I'm sorry you're going," he said.

She glanced up swiftly at him, then away. It was nice of him to be sorry. He was a dear old thing. His business was buying cutch—"and such." So much he had told her. It occurred to her now that she had meant to ask what cutch is.

"I'm sorry on your account as well as my own," he added. This stirred some feelings of discomfort within her. He was an inescapable man. He had a way of pinning you down. "I've helped you because—well, you're not a child" (this was decent of him, at least), "and if you're determined to go I don't feel that I have the right to stop you. But it worries me."

"I am sorry to worry you," she said gently (she had wanted, at first, to say, "I'm sorry you don't trust me"); "but it's the way I feel. And I can't take any other course. It has been very hard to decide. Anything I do is certain to distress either me or somebody else. There are reasons why I simply can't take that long journey home with aunt and uncle. I can't! I've got to be alone."

"So am I," he replied soberly, "very sorry."

She hesitated. "Do we say good-by, then?"

"O, no." He shook his head. "I shall be on the Bund for the first trip of the tender. If I miss you, by any chance, I shall go straight out to the ship."

A moment later he was hurrying out of the shop. She followed him as far as the door, carefully taking her parasol, but casually leaving the bag of gold on the showcase. She had once had a parasol stolen.

She saw him nod to a man who had ridden a bicycle to the curb, and pause for a word.

She did not see him, a little way down the street, leap into the first pony victoria that cruised by, and dash for the German club, that big white building on the Bund. (It is a reasonably safe guess that when a German steamship agent has finished his day's work he will be found in the immediate vicinity of food.) She did not see him when, a little later, with passage to Hongkong in his pocket (courtesy of the new cabinless second purser), he whirled around to the cable office and sent off sixty-three dollars' worth of messages. Nor did she see him, at his room in the Astor house, packing a trunk, two suitcases, and a catch-all bag with the deft assistance of a Chinese body servant. Mr. Carpenter, it would appear, could move, on occasion, with decision and dispatch.

She did, however, observe the man on the bicycle to whom Mr. Carpenter had spoken. A youngish man he was, and an American. He was looking up at her, steadying himself against the curb by stretching out a none too well shod foot. And her brows puckered slowly into a frown—a frown that deepened, if anything, when he, with some diffidence, raised his hat. Which head piece was a battered old derby, rather oddly out of season.

He was a bony man; his Chinese tailored sack suit hung wrinkled and loose on his frame. His face was not unattractive—not quite. The chin was small, and was gentle, almost soft, in outline; a weak feature, on the whole. The mouth above it suggested extreme sensitiveness; the lips were compressed, as if from a long standing habit of patient self-suppression, and lines curved down around the corners from the sides of his nose. But beneath the brim of the derby hat, which had settled on the back of his head after his tentative greeting, was exposed a sweat beaded forehead that was higher and wider than common. And the eyes beneath it were large, blue, and almost disturbingly ingenuous.

An unbusinesslike person, surely, whose judgment would be none of the shrewdest; not quite what you would call an enterprising man; the sort on whom the fates, in idle and ruthless moments, are inclined to play tricks; the sort that does well, indeed, to learn submission. He wore a necktie that was perceptibly frayed at the top where the knot is tied. His shapeless trouser legs were confined in steel clips.

While she looked, a creaking passenger wheelbarrow, its proprietor frantically dodging a motor car, ran into his rear wheel and spilled him over the curb. He arose with dust spots on his knees and a dent in the old derby, rescued the bicycle, and, dodging through the slow moving current of tourists, white residents, Chinese and Eurasians of various sorts on the sidewalk, leaned the wheel against the store front. Then, as the girl was still there in the doorway, he stepped up beside her.

"I'm sorry to disturb you again, Miss Austin," he began. "But I wonder if—for just a few minutes——"

He faltered. For this rather bewilderingly cool and beautiful girl was looking straight at him out of big hazel eyes that had a snap in them, and that appeared to be turning brown, or near it, with something very like anger.

"But I thought" said she, tapping a white toe impatiently, "that you were not to disturb me again."

"You surely don't suppose I'm here from choice," he broke out unexpectedly—"as if I enjoyed annoying you!"

It was an out and out personal remark, wholly uncalled for, but quite what might be expected from that babyish chin and those big, rather unreal blue eyes.

"Then why do you annoy me?" she asked, not so hostile.

"Because the managing editor has instructed me to get the Edith Austin story," he muttered, gazing at the fat Chinese policeman out there in the center of the early evening traffic, "and not to come back without it."

"But that is absurd," said she. "There is no Edith Austin story."

"Oh, yes there is," said he. "You did run away from your uncle and aunt at Tientsin——"

"How do you know that?" she asked, with wide eyes.

"Our Pekin man happens to be on the boat with them now. Mr. Wilberly has admitted it—we have that by wireless. When a little coaster sticks for three days on the Taku bar, folks get acquainted pretty fast, you know. And, more than that——"

"Well, what more than that?" It was her turn to flush.

Clearly the reporter was going to do his duty, if it blasted him. "Lieut. Robert Carver of the navy is with them. We have an old picture of him; and the assistant city editor himself got a snap shot of you yesterday—on the street. And we have a big head in type right now."

"But what about?" asked the girl; then bit her lip. "This is silly."

"Oh, romance—that sort of thing. Our people hesitate to run the story until we can find the key—the real facts of your disappearance, and how Mr. Carver comes in. My instructions are to find out whether you and he have quarreled, or"—he hesitated an instant, then went on doggedly, with a little gulp—"or whether there's another man."

"O, but surely you paper wouldn't—" Her voice faltered. The sudden thought that her character was in the hands of this queer reporter person with the stove-in derby hat and the bicycle clips came over her with unsettling force.

"I was over at the consulate just now." For this was what he was saying. "And they're all stirred up about you. Your uncle has instructed them to hold you here until he arrives. They showed me the message. It seems that you are—well, not quite of legal age yet. They've picked up the rumor that you are planning to leave tonight by the German mail, and the vice consul has just sent a man down to the bund to detain you if you try to get aboard the launch."

"Listen," she said, "I am going to take the German mail."

"Tonight?"

"Tonight."

"But"—he was fairly staring at her, suddenly as free from self-consciousness as she herself—"they'll never let you get away."

"I'll hire a sampan, then. And I'll go late. All my money is in there in a bag."

"But—but—but—but——"

He was stuttering, and they both laughed a little.

"In where?"

"Here in the shop. I must have left it on the showcase."

"You must have—is it gold?"

"Yes. Four or five pounds. I'm a little worried about carrying it. You see, you can't hide it, and——"

"Why can't you? That's only twenty-odd dollars."

"O, no," she cried; "not English pounds!"

"You don't mean avoirdupois?"

"Yes, or is it Troy? You see——"

But he interrupted her by catching her arm and hurrying her back into the shop.

"Great heavens!" he was whispering in her ear, as they passed between two seven foot Ming vases on carved blackwood pedestals. "Four or five pounds—that's all of—and there's been any number of people going in and out.

"There it is!" said she then.

There it was, still on the show case, and guarded by the proprietor, who looked as nearly worried as a Chinaman can look.

The reporter picked it up, and stowed it under his coat. "Come," he said, and took her arm again.

And he dragged her, between a walk and a run, a litle way up Kiukiang road, through another alley, around three quiet corners, past the Parsee cemetery, and finally let her pause for breath on the more populous Canton road, while he hailed a victoria.

"We'd better not risk separating in rickshaws," he explained.

"But—" She was out of breath, and her voice faltered. "But are you? You've been very good—I mustn't trouble you."

He looked at her, then turned away, with a gulp, and made a show of watching the carriage as it wheeled around to the curb. His sensitive lips were compressed very tightly, and there was a pained, almost a hunted expression about his eyes. Suddenly he looked at her again, very determined now, and a little wild, like a man who has just made the boldest decision of his life, and who is headed, full steam, for deep waters.

She shrank back. He frightened her.

"I'm going to see you through," he said, with that low, nervous laugh. "You leave Shanghai tonight on the German mail! There's my hand on it! We'll let the uncle rage and the consul general imagine a vain thing. Get in. The first thing is for you to have food. We'll drive around behind the racecourse and out Bubbling Well road. We have a little time to kill. And nobody will look for you out there."

She had let her hand drift into his. After all, why not? It was only for a few hours. He couldn't be thinking of himself, in the usual masculine way for he was pledged to the task of sending her off. And he wasn't a man you could be afraid of for long—not with that sad, gentle mouth, that made you want to take care of him, and the dust spots on his knees that he hadn't even thought to brush off.

She stepped into the low carriage and sank back on the seat, he swinging in after her, and shouting something to the mafoo in Chinese.

She laughed softly.

"What is it?" said he. The mafoo was cracking his whip over the shaggy Manchurian pony.

"I didn't know you could talk Chinese. It sounds so funny."

At this he became very grave, and a little white about the mouth. He made no reply. She wondered.

And they drove on.

"I wonder if this is all perfectly dreadful?" mused Edith aloud.

He looked up from his American steak (he had ordered lavishly) and regarded their queerly assorted fellow diners. It was in a restaurant well out on Bubbling Well road. At the next table sat four men who could not possibly have been anything in the world but gamblers, one of whom, a thin man with a deeply lined face and a livid purple puff under one eye, had a familiar look. Just beyond them were two Europeans, overred as to face, with two of those very elaborately dressed "American girls" from Soochow road. On the other side was a rougher group, inclined to drink rather persistently of Japanese made champagne in genuine French bottles, and further inclined, with equal persistency, to eye Miss Austin and her escort. In a corner a group of sailors—"Always they sailors," paraphrased Edith—were singing under their breath the extremely British comic song recently popularized on the coast by the Purple Mysteries—"They Pushed Him Through the Window."

"It is rough," said he, in reply to her remark of a moment back. "But then, all Shanghai eating places are that. The only difference is that some are dressier."

"I didn't mean the restaurant," said she. "Still, it is right. I've got to go. I couldn't stay here."

At this he grew moody. "Shanghai isn't a very good place to stay."

"Only for short trips," she observed; then added impulsively: "Think, think of the poor people that get stranded here and have to stay."

An instant later she could have bitten her tongue off, for his eyes had drooped and that odd whiteness had come about his mouth.

"O," she murmured in confusion, "I didn't think; but you haven't had——"

"I've been here nine years," said he, very quiet.

"But you've been back—you've had trips——"

He slowly shook his head. "It's eleven years next month since I've seen the home town, or any of my folks."

She did not know what to say. Tears came to her eyes. He was so sort of crushed—and so patient and sweet about it. How he must feel, sometimes, watching other Americans come and go; gay and irresponsible; throwing money around, while he struggled to keep barely alive! His clothes did not look like that. And he hadn't even a proper hat for the hot weather—nothing but that absurd old derby.

The reporter sat looking moodily at the tablecloth. After a little time he drew from his inside coat pocket a bundle of "copy" paper that was scribbled in pen and pencil on both sides.

"I've had dreams," he said, in a voice that was growing husky. "But I guess we all have those. For five years, off and on, I've tinkered at this thing here. Once—that was two years ago—your friend Carpenter showed it to a big New York manager who was out here. But he said nobody'd be interested in Chinese opera; said they'd think of laundrymen."

"O, it's an opera?" said she, looking with interest at the closely scribbled sheets.

"A libretto—sort of between comic and romantic. It's called 'Mary and the Mandarin.' I've tried to catch some—even a little—of the color and charm there is out here. O, if you could only make 'em feel it!"

"I know," murmured Edith, thinking of camel trains in sunken roads and gray old walled villages and winding brown valleys where pear trees blossomed. "I know. If you could only make them feel it!"

"You see," he went on, with a frankness that was too simple and honest to be wholly depressing, "it's the only chance a chap like me has of ever getting back—making a sudden killing of some sort. And sometimes, when I realize that I may never even have that one glimpse of the old town, I sort o' lose my nerve. I tried the lottery for a while. And little pecks at the pari-mutuel. And then this opera. Working nights, you know. For three years it looked like a sure thing to me; the lovely Chinese color would have been new stuff on Broadway. But that manager sort o' discouraged me, I guess. And then, if you stay here too long, you get like the Chinese—your mind turns gray, and you lose your energy. It's only lately that I've taken it up again."

He had leaned forward on the table. Now the bag of gold, which he had placed in his lap, slid off, and struck the floor with a solid thud and a chink.

Both started. Their eyes met. Nothing but a bag of gold coins could possibly have made just that sound.

They looked down. There it lay, on the floor beside the table—the old canvas bag, tied with strings and with Chinese characters on the side in red.

The sound had been heard by others. The gambler persons were staring down at it; one of them whistling softly. A painted girl with gay, roving eyes lifted her glass to them and laughed. The Chinese waiter retrieved the bag, frankly surprised at the weight; held it up rather conspicuously; restored it to the reporter's lap.

They were silent for a few moments, conscious that many eyes were taking them in. Then he grew moody again. And memories came to him.

"Japan is lovely at this time," he observed. "And earlier in the spring. Nine years ago this month I was in Yokohama. Was headed for home, but couldn't get any farther. Say, did you ever take a rickshaw ride over the bluff to Mississippi bay?"

She never had.

"There was a teahouse there. The usual cherry blossoms. And a little girl. I used to sit there by the hour, watching the torpedo boats practice, and trying to teach her English. Wrote my 'Mississippi Bay' song out of that." He was lookingly eagerly among the loose sheets. "But, say, I mustn't bore you with this."

"Go on," she said softly. "Tell me more."

"Here we are! The onjenoo sings it—Mary's little sister. There's the usual verse. Starts like this—

"Come back, Yankee sailorman, to Mississippi bay!
A little heart is beating,
A wistful mouth is greeting;
The cherry blossoms droop so,
The petals slowly fall;
The white faced tourists troop so
Beyond the teahouse wall.
Come back, Yankee sailorman, and anchor with the tide—
Trail your flag of red and write,
Spread your stars about my night
Come you back to Missisipi bay!

Edith straightened up and drew in a quick breath. "Why," she said gently, with a sparkle in her eyes, "it's good!"

"If you don't stop giving me just snatches, this way," she was saying, "I don't know what I'll do to you. Why, it's lovely. I had no idea—you're a perfect old fraud! Now, man, I want you to begin at the beginning and read me every word. Every word, mind!"

"O," said he, his face alight with the utter happiness of the poet who finds himself appreciated, "I was afraid, you see——"

"Do as I tell you!" commanded Edith. "Read it all!"

Accordingly, he read it all. All, that is, except the big duet, "Maskee means never mind." He had apparently lost it out of the lot of sheets. Maybe it was home somewhere, kicking around. "It's where the lovers have to part," he explained.

"It's after 9," said Edith, looking at the watch on her wrist. "And I could just cry. But, if I'm going——"

He was too deep in the work of his heart of hearts to come to earth in a moment. At the reminder that this wonderful evening must end, he sat and blinked at her. Slowly the radiance died out of his face, until it had ranged the whole distance from glory to gloom. He looked at her with an intensity that fastened her eyes to his and made her hold her breath. He lowered his gaze to the scattered papers; then took to marking a Chinese character on them with his pencil—all over them. In the quarter hour that followed, with only an occasional disconnected phrase spoken by either, he must have made that character fifty times, the same queer character each time. "It looks like a conventionalized spider," thought Edith.

She began to realize that she was tired, and this protracted reaction of his was a strain

"So you write Chinese, too?" she ventured.

"Yes," said he, without looking up. And again he went white about the mouth.

A few more minutes passed. Then, suddenly and shortly, he pushed back his chair, stuffed the wad of scribbled sheets back into his pocket, and rose, the bag of gold in his hand.

"Come on," he said huskily. "We'll go."

Almost timidly she followed him—literally followed him—out. He called a carriage. They dashed off along the electric lighted road.

Another carriage followed them. He turned and looked back at it. And at the same time he gathered her little hand rather roughly into his own and held it firmly.

"I've been a dam' fool," he said, as if he were thinking aloud. "Lost my head completely. I think we're going to have trouble. I've exposed you to every kind of a row, God knows!"

They had passed the race-track and were approaching the business section. He stood up, holding on to the back of the forward seat, touched the mafoo, and pointed to the right, down a side street.

The mafoo hesitated, glanced over his shoulder, then obeyed.

Edith caught the arm of her escort. Under the wide, curving straw hat and above the blue Chinese gabardine she had glimpsed the profile of a Caucasian.

"He's white," she whispered.

The reported nodded. "You never saw shoulders like that on a Chinaman. Those were army shoulders once."

The other carriage swung around the corner, half a block behind. They turned other corners, and rolled swiftly through darker, narrower streets. From the changing character of buildings and shops they were apparently nearing the native city. The reporter was on his feet at every turn, talking in crisp Pidgin English to the mafoo. Once the masquerader turned, and Edith saw the shine of sweat on his cheek and chin. And steadily the other carriage followed.

Suddenly the reporter reached back and seized the bag of gold. Again he spoke to the mafoo. They rounded a corner. The reporter, holding hard and swaying on his feet, raised the bag in his right hand, measured his distance, and swung it against the side of the mafoo's head, just under the brim of the big hat.

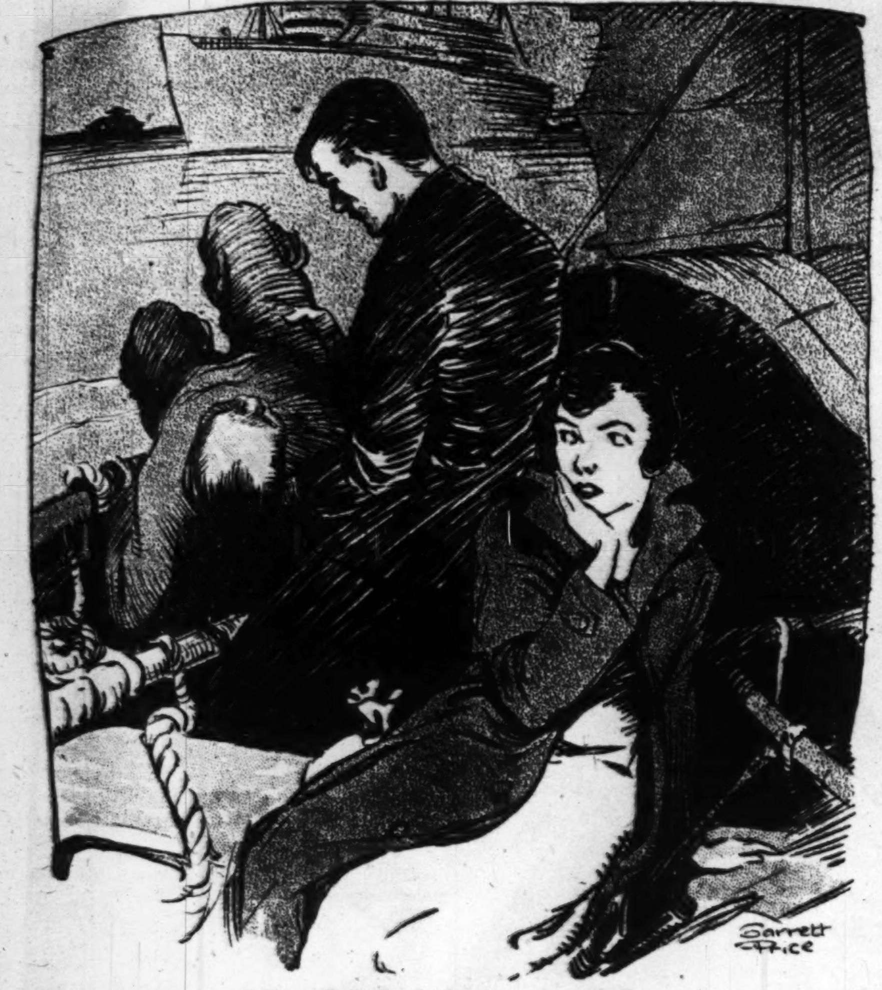
The man made no sound; merely slid off the seat and tipped endwise over the footboard, striking the pony's rump. His body must have blocked the wheels, for the carriage stopped abruptly.

"Jump!" said the reporter.

Edith leaped out. He followed, gripped her arm, and led her on a run into a placid little Chinese shop.

They went out through a long passage, and emerged on the creek that is north north boundary of Frenchtown.

"Now," he said, "if you're up to it we'll hike right along. We're all clear, so far."



"He rolled the body over the side."

They crossed a bridge and went through to the moat of the native city; then for half a mile followed the long curve of the wall. Finally they came out on the French bund, where there were lights and a slow moving street crowd of Chinese and French, and beyond, the open space of the river, and the red and green lights of the ships, and the clustering, matting covered sampans at the water's edge.

Straight to one of the larger sampans he led her. It had a sail of matting and was moored by a single line. He handed her in, tossed the boatman a handful of Mexican dollars, cast off the line, and leaped in with it. The boatman shouted and gesticulated as the clumsy craft drifted out in the tidal current. From under the cabin of matting peered the moon faces of a native woman and a pack of children. Nearer at hand a half naked baby lay asleep, coiled in a large earthenware crock that kept it clear of the water in the bottom of the boat.

The boatman continued his protest with growing excitement. He caught the rail of another sampan that was moored to the shore fleet. The reporter uttered a few emphatic sentences in the native tongue, then turned toward Edith, who had seated herself at the stern, and tossed the bag of gold down beside her. It fell with that same solid thud and chink.

He had done it again. Again their eyes met. Faces appeared in the neighboring sampans—inscrutable slanting eyes that peered through the faint light; loose yellow lips that chattered in singsong.

The reporter was again talking in Chinese, talking with a good deal of emphasis. The argument was extended until a curious little crowd gathered on the quay. Finally two other batmen, stripped to the waist, their yellow skin glistening in the electric light from the shore. The moon faced ones were bundled over on to the shore fleet. The white man himself passed over the earthenware crock with the bare little infant curled within it in slumber.

The two newcomers went forward and got out the sweeps. The owner crawled around behind his passengers and took the tiller. The little craft drifted out clear of its fellows and swung around to the north.

The sweeps moved lazily to and fro. An occasional light breeze came over the water, rippling it just enough to shiver the clear reflections of the lights into a thousand glittering, wavering fragments, and filled the ribbed sail of matting until it creaked lazily on the mast. And the half naked men at the sweeps sang a jerky, rhythmical chantey as they worked.

They slid past the two old opium hulks, out there in mid channel, with their shingled gable roofs. They passed a Chinese torpedo boat, a Japanese cruiser, a tramp from Norway. He pointed out the sights of the Bund, where the lights flickered softly through the trees and the faint sounds of the evening traffic came out to them. He had drawn her tired little head down on his shoulder, and was holding it there.

"I want to hear the duet," she said softly. "Don't you suppose you could remember the words?"

He shook his head. "I don't want to," he said, and held her tight against him. "They are parting, you know."

"Yes," she mused dreamily—"I know."

"She clings to him. He tells her to be brave. Says, 'Maskee, we will wait.' She doesn't understand. He sings, 'Maskee Means Never Mind'—never mind the heartache, never mind the——"

His voice broke; she felt him shiver. Then he bent down and drew her face up to his and kissed her lips. Her hands stole up to the lapel of his coat, slipped around his neck. Again he pressed his lips to hers. No man had ever kissed her like that.

There was a stir and a movement directly behind them, within the sampan, that neither of them heard or saw.

Coughing and pounding along from the Bund the steam tender of the German mail came up from behind and passed them, sending a series of swells that gently rocked their craft. Neither knew it.

"I'm not going to ask if you love me," he whispered.

She buried her face against his coat.

"No," he went on, close to her ear, "I don't seem to care. It won't matter after this hour. But it is my big hour." His voice broke again, and he whispered unevenly, "My big hour. I've loved you from the minute I saw you. I couldn't stand it. I couldn't stand it. I'd live for you—and I'd die for you. I'm dreaming. It has all been a dream."

He could just hear her murmur, "Then I'm dreaming, too." Her head fell back on his arm. She was looking out under drooping lids at the wide, silent river.

"I'm bewildered," she said a little later, sitting erect and pressing her hands to her eyes. "I don't want to go to that ship. I want to stay here. O, you don't know how strange this is! I'm different. I'm all changed. Nothing that I thought seems to be so."

He took her in his arms again.

"Yes," she went on, breathless; "it's all changed, all new. Suppose I don't go. I'll take you away from this dreadful city. We'll go to Yokohama, you and I. And we'll ride in rickshaws to Mississippi bay!"

She laughed, softly and excitedly, and nestled closer within the grip of his arm. It was amazing, this sudden discovery that back of her restlessness and her resentments surged daring thoughts and great wild forces.

"If you only knew what you've done—what this means! It's queer. It bewilders——"

"What that?" he muttered shortly, and sat up rigid. "What's that?"

He looked behind him. The helmsman was not there. The sweeps were still. There was silence forward—broken only by the pad of naked feet in the dark of the matting cabin. There was silence again, then a rustling.

He glanced swiftly around. They had left the lights of Shanghai around a bend; the "Paris of the East" was now only a yellow glow in the sky. On either shore were the low fields of the open countryside. A mile or so ahead were the lights and the dim outline of a big liner.

Again they caught that rustling in the cabin.

"This means trouble," said he. He had taken his arm from about her and was fumbling for something in his coat pocket. "It may be the end of us," he added, more calmly and with some bitterness. "I've failed you again, it seems."

"No, no," said she, "you haven't—you haven't!"

"That's about the size of it. But I'll tell you this"—he was leaning forward, his eyes fixed on the black semi-circle under the arch of the matting. "If I get you through all right, just remember that one man has loved you with all——"

She stopped the words with her own soft mouth. She was sobbing a little, and the tears were running unheeded down her face.

For an instant he pressed her slim body against his own; then tore her arms away and swung her partly behind him.

"Is the bag there?" he asked, never shifting his eyes from the cabin.

She was searching. "No—I can't find it."

"That devil got it all right. Look out! Lie down behind me!"

There was a swift rush from that black archway. His automatic pistol was up on the instant, spitting bullets in a stream. One man dropped. One leaped back. The third came staggering toward them, nearly fell over the reporter, and caught at the girl's arm to save himself from going over the side. He had a knife in his hand. The white man had to hit him over the head and then kick him clear of the rail. He dropped, with a quiet little splash, and disappeared.

The reporter stood over the cabin and called in Chinese. Slowly the last native crawled out, empty handed. The reporter sent him back. This time he brought the bag of gold. The reporter tossed it back on the seat by the girl. "It seems to be all right," he said.

She examined it and replied. "Yes, I think it's all here."

The yellow man crouched near the side of the sampan, visibly shivering with fright. The reporter looked at him thoughtfully, with lowered weapon.

"There's a Chinese crew on that ship," he mused, "and we don't want stories told. After all, I don't know that one more makes so much difference."

Accordingly, he shot the last one through the head, and rolled his body over the side.

The bugler of the German liner had blown his last note of warning. The final calls of "All ashore!" had resounded from deck to deck. The steam tender whistled repeatedly as it swung off; passengers crowded the rail, waving handkerchiefs and shouting farewell messages.

A little later, when the tender was no more than a dark spot with twinkling lights above it at the end of a long lane of white foam, a sampan slid up unobserved to the companion ladder.

A girl stood at the side. A white man held the little boat close to the grating.

"Quick," he said. "Jump!"

"What if I shouldn't—" she breathed.

"For God's sake!" said he, in a voice that he could not control very well.

"But wait! What on earth are you going to do? How can you go back?"

"Maskee! Maskee! Get aboard. They'll be hauling this thing up in a minute."

A moment longer the girl hesitated. Very white she was, in costume and face. She bent her head toward him; but he said nothing, merely devoted his strength to keeping the clumsy craft from swinging off with the tide. Finally she stepped over on to the grating. In one hand she carried a green parasol, in the other a bag of gold that was not quite dry on one side.

She paused a moment to draw down her veil, casually setting down the bag on the grating as she did so. Then she went up the ladder, rather slowly.

She was vaguely conscious that a German quartermaster was shouting down the ladder. On the promenade deck the inevitable little German band was tooting its farewell to the port of Shanghai. There was a great stir and movement of gayly dressed passengers, a general air of irresponsible security.

She did not hear his voice until he was directly behind her, nearly at the top of the ladder.

He was quite out of breath. "Quick," he said, "they mustn't see me! But I want you to have this." And he thrust the familiar wad of copy paper into her hands, just a mass of loose sheets that, with the bag of gold and the parasol and her wrist bag to manage, she could hardly keep from blowing away.

"It's my whole story," he went on rapidly. "It's all there. What wasn't there I wrote on it tonight—at the restaurant. My whole story."

He turned and ran down the long ladder, two steps at a time. At some point in their troubles he must have lost his hat, for he was bareheaded now; but the bicycle clips still confined the bottoms of those shapeless trousers.

Wearily, feeling very, very old, she went on to the deck, where no one appeared to notice her particularly, and then found her cabin below.

Her plan was to go directly to bed, but she couldn't. Instead, she straightened out the heap of papers with a gentle hand and crowded them into her shopping bag, and went back to the promenade deck. She wondered, as she mounted the stairs, what it was that he had written—that spidery Chinese character.

There was some excitement out here, it seemed. The brightly clad passengers had crowded to the rail. An unmistakably German voice, somewhere aft, was booming out orders. But the passengers were hushed.

She edged in just behind a party of women. One of these proved to be a kindly old lady with white hair and with a sort of horror on her face.

"What is it?" asked Edith. "What has happened?" Her voice sounded small and strange.

It was a moment before the old lady could find her own voice, then she replied: "O, my dear! It is dreadful. A man is drowned."

It was half an hour later that she encountered Mr. Carpenter. She was walking back and forth, a solitary little figure in white, among the shadows at the rear of the promenade deck. He came slowly along, his head bowed, moodily smoking a cigar.

He asked no questions—merely gave her a long look of relief, and stood by her at the rail, watching the dim, low shores. It did not occur to her to ask why he was here. It was a long time before she could frame the question that was in her mind. She managed it finally by opening her shopping bag, taking out a few of the loose sheets, and holding them up in the light of one of the electric deck lamps.

"What does that Chinese mean?" she asked. Her voice was natural enough; but, O, how old she felt!

He took the papers in his hand and studied the closely. It was good of him to take her having them so for granted, for he knew all about them.

He looked up, and thoughtfully flicked the ash off his cigar. "That," he said, "is an old Chinese character meaning——"

He stopped short, and looked down at his cigar.

"He said it was his whole story," she broke out impulsively. "I think he wanted me to know."

"Well, then," Carpenter went on, "it is the old ideograph representing, literally, two women under a roof. And it means trouble. It is the Chinese for our word 'trouble'. . . The poor boy had a Chinese wife and several children."

Later, after he had made her walk for a while, he said, in a refreshingly matter of fact tone:

"The purser is still up. This would be his busy night. I really think you'd better turn your gold over to him and take a receipt."

Miss Austin, her green veil covering a sad white face, obeyed.

THE TEENIE WEENIES.

LET THERE BE PEACE. SAYS QUEEN MOOIE.

by Wm. DONAHEY.

"GENERAL," said the Old Soldier, looking into the commander's tent, "Here's a letter for you which one of the wild men handed to one of our pickets early this morning. He's waiting at our outpost for an answer."

The General opened the letter, which was written in poke-berry ink on a light piece of very thin bark, and this is what he read:

"Commander in Chief, Nov. 14, 1917.
Teenie Weenie Army.

"My dear General: Her royal highness, Mooie, Queen of the wild men, sends greetings. Her highness wishes to talk over terms of peace with you and suggests that you and your staff meet her at the stream which crosses the path half way between the Sabo village and your camp. Her highness awaits your pleasure and asks your excellency to set a date for the meeting.

"Respectfully yours,
"RUFUS RHYME."

"P. S.—Although the Lady of Fashion and I have been closely guarded since we have been prisoners, we have been very well treated and I ask that you take this in consideration when you arrange peace terms.

"R. R."

The General answered the note at once, making arrangements to meet the queen on the following day.

The next day at the appointed time the General, the Old Soldier, and a guard of eight soldiers marched off to the meeting place, where they found the queen awaiting them.

The queen sat on her favorite turtle and she had with her several of her warriors and the Poet.

As the Teenie Weenies drew near, the Queen and her followers raised their left hands above their head, which is the Sabo custom when friends meet. The Queen was the first to speak and the Poet, who had learned the Sabo language while he was held prisoner, translated her words to the Teenie Weenies as follows:

"O, great chief of the thunder wagon (the name of men of the thunder wagon was given to the Teenie Weenies on account of the cannon which the wild men said sounded like thunder), we have come here to ask for peace. We do not wish to fight, we ask only for the liberty of our brothers whom you hold prisoners. Give us back our brothers and we will return the Lady of Fashion and the Poet to you. We will also give you two hundred smoked frog hams for our brothers return."

"O, queen of beauty and ruler of all the Sabos," said the General when the Poet had finished, "We do not wish to fight, and we ask only for the return of our friends. For their safe return we will free your brothers and the hams you have offered we could not think of taking, for we took up arms against you, not for gain, but only for the freedom of the Lady of Fashion and the Poet."

The Queen was greatly pleased at the General's words and arrangements were made for the exchange of the prisoners.

That same day all the wild men, except the ones who were in the hospital and who were too sick to leave, were set free, and the Lady of Fashion and the Poet were welcomed to the Teenie Weenie camp.

The Young Man in Peacock Alley

By Elizabeth Jordan

"He Forgot That Only a Short Hour Ago It Had Bored Him Beyond Endurance. Now It Had Suddenly Become Brilliant, Fascinating, Alluring to the Highest Degree."

MR. ALLEN RENFEW sat in a gaudily upholstered chair in the corridor of a great New York hotel at 7 o'clock one spring evening and scowled at the carefree throng that indifferently surged past him. He was an exceedingly lonely young man, and his resentment over this unusual and mournful condition was not lightened by the knowledge that he had no one to blame for it but himself.

He had come to New York without deigning to write or to telegraph his intention to his few intimate friends in the city, as he should have done; and today, on his arrival, he had found two of them out of town, a third strenuously engaged for the evening, and a fourth apparently out of all touch with humankind, judging by his lack of response to notes, door bells and telephone calls. Young Renfew knew that any one of the four, if properly warned of his arrival, would have been delighted to see him, and might even have broken an ordinary engagement for the pleasure of his company; but the reflection did not soothe him. If anything, it added to his gloom. Here he was, a truly companionable human being, loving his kind and loved by them, yet going to waste, as it were, for an entire evening, simply because he didn't happen to know any of the hundreds of equally companionable human beings around him.

"They call this Peacock Alley," he mused, looking down the long corridor with its kaleidoscopic effects. "Good name for it, too. Place for women to show off their plumage and for men to strut around and exhibit themselves. Nothing attractive about this!"

He had spent more than half an hour in the occupation of dressing, deliberately drawing it out as long as he could. Now he could kill an hour or two over his dinner.

He rose and strolled along Peacock Alley toward the dining room, telling himself glumly that to eat from 7 to 9 and then sleep from 9 to 7 seemed the sole solution of his simple problem. He was smiling sardonically over the contrast between this program and the jolly evening he had expected to have with his friends, when he saw a charming woman, who was passing with an equally charming girl, glance at him indifferently, then look again more sharply and suddenly stop. Possibly she had been misled by his smile, for their eyes had met before it ended. At any rate, she was approaching him now with a beautiful smile of her own and a hand outstretched in cordial greeting.

"Why, how do you do?" she exclaimed, with evident pleasure in the unexpected meeting. "How do you happen to be here?" Mr. Renfew took her hand and beamed upon her with the sudden warmth he felt. For a moment he honestly believed she was some one he knew and had forgotten—though that he could have forgotten her was even then incredible. Whoever she was, it was simply great to meet her again here and now. Wildly searching his memory for some clew to her, he filled the interval with a simple statement of fact.

"I'm only here for the night," he said. "I'm sailing for Europe in the morning."

She drew back and looked at him in obvious and extreme surprise.

"For Europe?" she repeated. "But how can you get away? Jack wrote that you were absolutely indispensable."

This was flattering, but puzzling. Who the deuce was Jack? Allen racked his brain in vain. He knew many Jacks, but none, alas! by whom he could possibly be regarded as indispensable. He held to a straight course in what he was beginning to realize was difficult sailing.

"Joseph Pulitzer said," he reminded her, cheerfully, "that the indispensable man is not yet born."

She looked at him, still puzzled. "But I can't see how Jack let you go," she murmured, "with the strike on."

Then suddenly remembering the quiet girl who was standing at her side, she said: "But I must present you to my niece. Mildred, this is Mr. Hutchins, Jack's new manager of the Rightaway mine."

So that was it. The whole thing had been a blunder. Allen Renfew's disgust and disappointment seemed a physical weight settling down upon him. This woman was simply delightful—the kind his sister Maud would be twenty years hence—and the girl with her was the loveliest, most exquisite being he had ever seen. For a moment they had stretched forth their friendly hands as if to pull him out of his abyss of loneliness. But it had all been a mistake, and the only possible thing for him to do was to say so and withdraw forever from their presence. There wasn't the slightest excuse for prolonging the conversation a second beyond the time of the necessary brief explanation. To do him justice his lips were parted for the fatal words even as he bent his handsome head in response to the introduction. But as he raised it to speak he looked straight into the girl's eyes and something there, deep down but looking shyly out at him—something fresh, virginal, trustful and indescribably appealing—checked him. 'Isn't this nice?" the glance seemed to say. "But don't imagine it is the first time we've met. Why, I've known you all my life. Don't you remember me?"

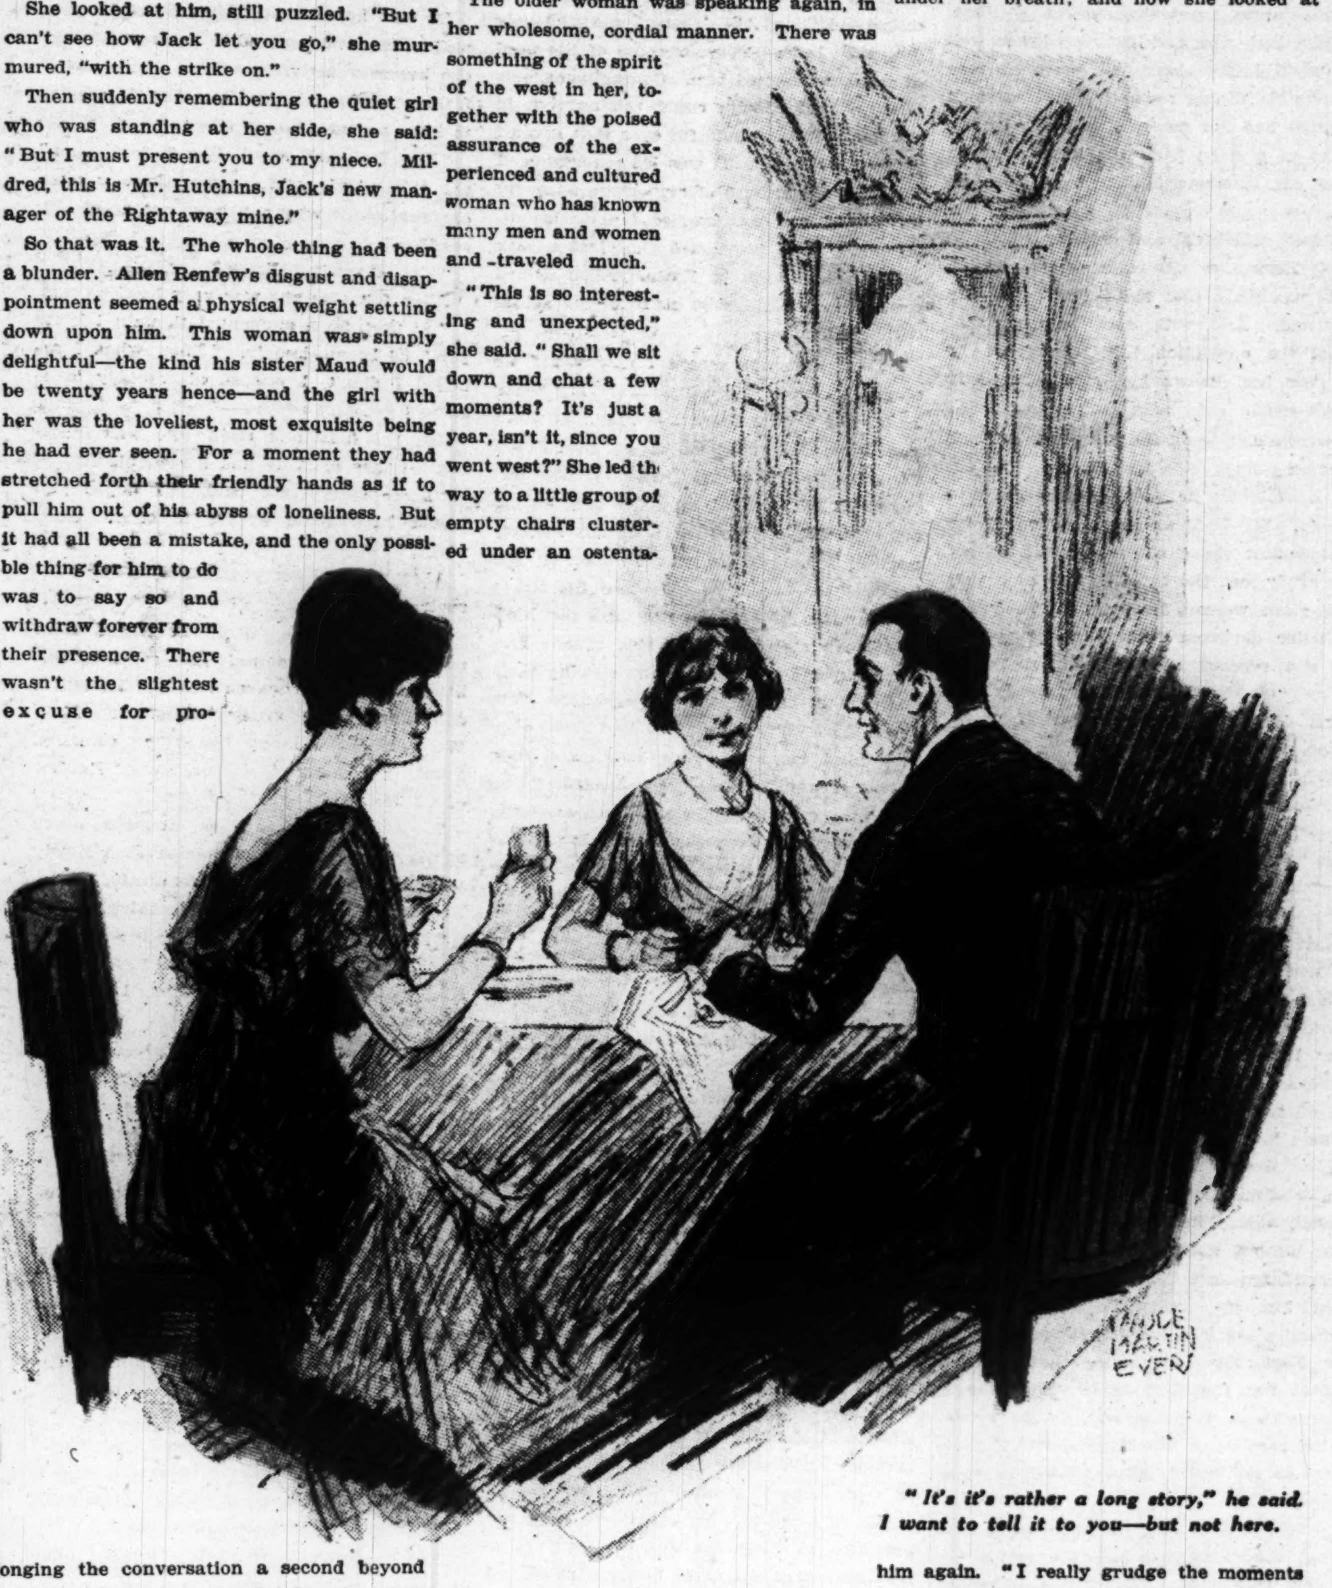
Suddenly it seemed to him that he did remember. Of course he knew her. They had met, where, when, he did not remember, in this world or some other—it didn't matter where. Why, he had even dreamed of her. And was he to lose her now, for a silly convention, because he didn't know her aunt? Never! His young jaw set. Without an instant's hesitation he decided to stand pat, as it were, in the odd situation, and to play the cards chance had put into his hands. To the voices of tradition and breeding he resolutely refused to listen. Here was something bigger than convention, more vital than tradition. Wherever it led he would follow.

"I'm in their class, anyway," he told himself. "There's no reason why I shouldn't know her aunt. We must have lots of friends in common. I'll just see this thing through."

The older woman was speaking again, in her wholesome, cordial manner. There was something of the spirit of the west in her, together with the poised assurance of the experienced and cultured woman who has known many men and women and traveled much.

"This is so interesting and unexpected," she said. "Shall we sit down and chat a few moments? It's just a year, isn't it, since you went west?" She led the way to a little group of empty chairs clustered under an ostentatious palm. "We've ordered our table for 7," she explained as they sat down, "and it's not quite that yet. But Mildred insists on seeing Peacock Alley in its fullest flower."

Allen looked at the young girl He was anxious to meet those wonderful eyes again, but now she seemed too much absorbed in her surroundings to do more than glance at him. Here eyes traveled rapidly here, there, and everywhere, lingering on some groups, quitting others at once, but full of an almost childish pleasure and excitement, and invariably returning to his for an instant's sympathy and understanding. She was not a child. She must be all of 20, Allen reflected. In dress and carriage she was as much a woman of the world as her aunt. In manner she combined dignity and poise with an adorable reserve. Her eyes alone spoke eloquently.



"It's it's rather a long story," he said. I want to tell it to you—but not here.

'You like this sort of thing, don't you?" he asked her. It seemed a wonderful thing to be speaking to her—at last. He even remembered the little dimple at the left corner of her mouth. Where, where, where had he watched it before?

"I love it!" she said. Both her hands were clutching the arms of her big chair as if she feared to be torn away from it by some strange force in this new world she had entered. "I love every minute of it, and everything in it," she added, almost under her breath; and now she looked at him again. "I really grudge the moments we're in our rooms. It seems a crime to miss all this—there's so much life in it. Think of what these people represent—the homes, the types, the lives. I like to look at them and try to guess what is in their hearts."

"It is great," he conceded, and surveyed the pageant with an expression of proud proprietorship. He forgot that only a short hour ago it had bored him beyond endurance. Now it had suddenly become brilliant, fascinating, alluring to the highest degree—something that he himself had arranged for Mildred. "But I don't think I want you to know what's in their hearts," he concluded, cautiously. "Except in mine, of course. Read that, please."

Her soul looked out at him for an instant. Then, without answering, she turned her eyes away.

The Young Man in Peacock Alley

by Elizabeth Jordan

The music was superb now, crashing and triumphant—in keeping with one's mood. It had seemed almost diabolically mournful an hour ago, but Mr. Renfew, who was not analytical, abandoned himself to the phenomenon of the sudden change with entire content.

Mildred's aunt spoke to him again, and they talked for ten minutes, the young man showing much skill in controlling the subjects discussed. He was exceedingly anxious to keep away from the subject of Jack, whoever Jack was, and he succeeded so well that when Jack's sister and her niece rose to go to the dining room that able western capitalist had not received so much as the tribute of a word from the little circle to whom his interests should have been so vital.

Mildred said little, and said that little to "Aunt Helen," as she called her chaperon, but it was plain that she listened and was interested. And with each moment that passed the conviction that somewhere he had seen her, known her, strengthened in Allen's mind.

The breaking up of the party was a tragic awakening from this fair dream. For ten glorious minutes he had been the happiest of men. He had, somehow, taken it for granted that those minutes would extend indefinitely into the future. And here they were, those women, hurling him back into the outer darkness from which they had only now rescued him. His expression, as he rose to his feet, was so openly and utterly despairing that it moved the older woman to sudden sympathy.

"What are you doing this evening, Mr. Hutchins?" she asked, kindly. "If you have no——"

But "Mr. Hutchins" was already assuring her of his complete freedom for the evening, with such passionate earnestness that both she and her niece smiled irrepressibly.

"Then if you care to dine with——"

"Mr. Hutchins" cared. He cared more ardently than he had ever cared for anything before in his life. He was quite shameless about it; so much so, in fact, that Mildred turned a pair of wonderfully sympathetic brown eyes upon him.

"How dreadfully lonely you must have been," she murmured. "You must never be so lonely again," her eyes seemed to add.

Mr. Renfew gazed into them, lost to his surroundings, until they turned away. Then, seeing his opportunity, he drew such an affecting picture of his experience alone in New York for five hours that Mildred laughed for the first time. She was a rather serious young person, on the whole, but her rare laugh was a wonderful thing—almost as wonderful, Allen decided, as were her eyes.

The dinner was very pleasant—even gay. Though the young man had cast most of his scruples behind him, he was still keenly conscious of his obligations as the guest of a hostess who had not the privilege of his acquaintance. He exerted himself to be agreeable and entertaining, and succeeded. Moreover, he began to feel a certain exhilaration in the danger of the situation. He was like a sailor handling a boat in a storm in unknown waters. There were rocks and reefs to be avoided. There was sail to be taken in—very suddenly at times. The rock which rose most often above the waves was "Jack"—that mysterious and rugged personality, whose very surname he did not know, yet with whom he was supposed to have the closest, most confidential business relations.

With an intelligence and skill preternaturally sharpened by consciousness of all these dangers Mr. Renfew navigated his social craft. Several times he narrowly escaped shipwreck; and, notwithstanding his quickness and cleverness, it began to dawn on the mind of his hostess, before the dinner ended, that something was wrong between Jack and his brilliant young manager. She wondered what it was, and finally dismissed the subject mentally, with the hope that it was merely a misunderstanding which time might straighten out. She liked the young man, and it was increasingly evident that Mildred liked him too. Also that he liked Mildred. True woman that she was, she let her thoughts dwell on the possibilities of this mutual liking, while the young people, left to themselves, talked together in tones that grew more intimate and confidential with each moment that passed. As he talked to Mildred Allen's guard unconsciously dropped. Indeed, consciousness of the need of a guard deserted him. Concealment, subterfuge, such things could not survive in the light of the wonderful eyes that seemed to search his soul. It was his realization of this, and the tribute of responsive sincerity he offered her, that carried him to his destruction. She mentioned that just a year ago she had been in Spain. Allen leaned toward her breathlessly, his blue eyes ablaze with excitement.

"Then that was where I saw you!" he almost shouted. "In Algeciras! My sister Maud and I were there last May. O, don't you remember that night at the Reina Christina, when we gathered on our balconies to hear the nightingales sing in the moonlight? And you were in the balcony next to mine. There was a moon in the heavens too big to be true, and the lights of Gibraltar in the distance, and the Mediterranean sighing at the foot of our garden wall, and the nightingales singing their hearts out among the pomegranate blossoms. You were there. You had a veil over your head, but I saw your mouth and your eyes, and ever since——" He stopped. "I've seen them ever since," he added more quietly. Then he realized that his hostess was looking at him, and under the expression in her eyes a sudden chill swept over him.

"Why, Mr. Hutchins," she asked, slowly, "how could you have been in Spain last May? It was the first of May that Jack brought you to see me, and the next week you and he left for Montana to begin work on the Rightaway."

It was all over with Mr. Allen Renfew, and he knew it. Her manner was perfect. It assumed that an explanation would be forthcoming; it withheld judgment until that explanation was offered. But it tolerated no more evasions, no more half truths; for during his rhapsody over his recognition of Mildred the older lady had had time to think. Flushed, wretched, Mr. Renfew writhed under the steady eyes fastened upon him. Desperately he turned and looked at Mildred. Her eyes were fixed on the table cloth and she did not raise them. To experience such abject humiliation as he felt in that moment seemed almost as bad as anything could be. To experience it in her presence, to have her observe his further ignominy, was not to be borne. He turned an imploring look on his hostess.

"It's—it's a rather long story," he said. "I want to tell it to you—but not here."

"Very well," she said, quietly.

They had finished their coffee. She summoned the waiter, signed her check, and in silence led the way out of the brilliant room to the corridor.

As they followed her Allen had time for one quick question: "It was you, in Algeciras, wasn't it?"

"Yes," she said, "I was there." And she added, "I saw you, too."

Her aunt stopped before one of the elevator doors, and when the car appeared gave Mildred a key and motioned her into it.

"Go to our rooms, dear," she said. "I will be with you in a few moments."

Her niece obeyed dumbly, with a last glance at the despairing youth, which he returned with a look that spoke regret, remorse and something more.

When the girl had been borne aloft he followed his hostess to their former places, the chairs under the spreading palms. There she sat down, and motioned him to follow her example. He did so, but the absence of Mildred was a mitigating feature of the miserable situation, and it was with something like self-control that he next met the steady look of his hostess' suddenly keen and worldly eyes.

"So you are not Mr. Hutchins, after all?" she asked, dryly.

"No, I am Allen Renfew of San Francisco."

He had hoped that the name of Renfew, well known and honored in the west through the business activities of his distinguished father, might impress her, but it seemed to have no such happy effect.

"You look and speak like a gentleman," she said, slowly. "I suppose there is some explanation of why you have not acted like one?"

"Yes, if you will listen."

Allen felt that she was very hard on him.

"At first, for a moment, I thought I knew you," he began, lamely. "Then, when I realized I didn't, I was so abominably lonesome I couldn't resist——"

But the lady had risen, and was drawing her lace scarf around her shoulders.

"I am sorry," she said. "I hoped you would have some excuse to offer. Good night."

Allen pursued her breathlessly along Peacock Alley.

"But, Mrs. —— Great Scott! I don't even know your name!" he cried. "But listen to me, for heaven's sake! Though I don't know you, it's only chance that I don't. We must have many friends in common. Surely you know my father, Henry Renfew of California?"

They had reached the elevator doors again, but the car had just started slowly upward. Inwardly, but fervently, Allen blessed it. His hostess was speaking.

"I do know Henry Renfew," she said, coldly. "But I do not know that you are his son; and, if you will pardon me, I have no reason to take your word for it."

He took that without offense, knowing it was no more than he deserved.

"I'll prove it!" he cried eagerly. "I'll prove it right now! The night clerk knows me. I was here last spring."

She smiled ironically. "I'm afraid that would not convince me," she said, coldly. "But, after all, we are perhaps magnifying a trifle. You are sailing in the morning. Our acquaintance ends naturally. Good night."

The car was descending again. Allen waited for it as the victim of an execution might wait for the knife to drop.

"But—but—I can't let it end that way!" he cried. "Listen just a minute, Mrs.——O"—he paused impotently—"Aunt Helen!" he brought out in a despairing wail.

The austere face of the lady relaxed. She struggled with and barely conquered a telltale twitch of the lips. But Mr. Renfew saw it, and, with reviving courage and great presence of mind, followed her into the elevator.

"I'll have father telegraph you," he went on, breathlessly. "I'll get the Rev. John Menick of the Fourth Presbyterian church to come and see you tomorrow. You know him. He's my godfather. He'll tell you all about me. My sister Maud's going to be married in London this month to Capt. Winchley of the Scot Guards. She and mother are over there now. I'm going over to give her away. Father has the gout and can't travel. I'm all right—honestly I am," he finished, hopefully.

They had reached her floor now and were hurrying along the corridor.

"It will be all right in the morning," he repeated "after you see dad's telegram, you know. But I'll be gone then. So, Aunt Helen"—she had reached the door of her sitting room, but he checked her further progress by pinning her resolutely against the wall—"Aunt Helen, you'll let me see Mildred again, won't you? Just to say good-by?"

"Aunt Helen" succumbed to helpless laughter. "My young friend," she said, when she was able to speak, "I don't know whether you are what you say you are or the rank impostor I have every reason to believe you to be. But at least you have greater audacity than any other human being I have ever met. Once more, good night.'

"But wait," begged the young man. "Here, see this!" He pulled out his card case. "Here's my card. Here's my steamer ticket—and, by Jove! here's my letter of credit! Look at it. That ought to clear me. Now won't you let me see Mildred for just a moment?"

He forced the collection into her hand. She examined them slowly. She was beginning to believe that this extraordinary youth was telling the truth. She had read in the newspapers of the coming marriage of Henry Renfew's only daughter to an English officer. From the same source of information she had learned that Henry Renfew himself was the victim of an attack of gout and could not attend his daughter's wedding. She returned the ticket and letter of credit to their owner. Her manner was milder, but still firm.

"You cannot possibly see Mildred tonight," she said, quietly. "But while you are abroad I will look up your—your references. When you come back——"

"But I can't go off with nothing more definite than that!" he wailed. "I'll be gone almost three weeks!"

As if in answer to his mournful cry the door opened tentatively, and Mildred, still inside the room, looked out at them. Then, in answer to his imperative gesture, she stepped across the threshold and stood beside him. The long hall was deserted. Mr. Renfew assured himself of this by one swift glance down its length and seized both the young girl's hands.

"It's all right," he said swiftly. "She knows who I am. She's going to let me come and see you as soon as I get back. I'll sail for home the minute Maud's married. And when I do get back I've got something to say to you—Mildred; O, Mildred——"

He had one wonderful look from her—shy, adoring, hinting divinely at the things she could not say. Then she was taken from him by a stern and capable pair of hands and pushed gently back into the sitting room, the door of which was closed upon her.

Still holding the knob, the lady who had executed this maneuver faced the importunate lover. "Now, Mr. Renfew," she said, "I am sure you will obey me when I ask you to say good night to me and go away at once."

But the radiant young man she addressed was quite a different person from the crushed worm of half an hour ago. Had he not seen that never-to-be-forgotten light in Mildred's eyes? Had he not felt the soft response of her hands in his?

"All right!" he said, with an exultant swing of the shoulders. "But you understand, of course, that I'm going to marry Mildred!"

She shook her head at him. "You're wholly incorrigible," she said, and then, to stem the Niagara of words that so obviously beat against his lips, she added, "If the subject is ever discussed it will be after you return from Europe."

"Very well," he said. "We'll let it go at that. Maud's to be married on the [illegible] I'll be back on the 16th. If there's no boat I'll swim."

She gave him her hand and he pressed it rapturously.

"Good-by," she said, and went in resolutely and closed the door. Five seconds later there was an excited knocking on its solid panels. Reluctantly she opened it, and at her expression the young man in the corridor lost no time in stating the urgency of his business.

"I'm going," he said, anxiously, "but you forgot to give me your address. And oh, Aunt Helen"—his voice sank to a whisper and ended on a note of touching pathos—"what's the rest of Mildred's name?"

WHO IS NUMBER ONE?

by Anna Katharine Green

SYNOPSIS.

Aimée Villon, a beautiful young heiress, has come to live as the ward of Graham Hale, an inventor who has invaluable plans for the construction of submarines. Hugo Wald, Miss Villon's tutor, asks Hale to keep Miss Villon's securities in Hale's vault, an enormous and complicated depository, supposed to be impregnable. For eighteen years Hale has received on the same day each year a cryptic warning signed "The Twisted Thread," an organization which had perpetrated a number of crimes which had utterly baffled the police. The day Miss Villon is installed in the house another warning comes. Tommy Hale, Graham Hale's son, in making his way to the vault in the dark sees his father struggling with two masked men. He gives fight, but he and his father are worsted. The vault is rifled of the securities and submarine plans, and later the Hales discover the robbers attempting to carry away Miss Villon. They recover her. They pursue the criminals in an armored car on which a machine gun is mounted. When the criminals commandeer a freight engine and box car the pursuers hitch the armored car to the box car and give the outlaws a hand to hand battle, in which Tommy is wounded and the criminals escape.

Tommy, going to inspect the submarine Sea Crawler, finds it has been taken to sea by the Twisted Thread gang. On another submarine he pursues the Crawler and finds the gangsters looting a sunken liner. In a diving suit Tommy goes to the hulk to give battle. He is caught and locked in a room of the boat under the water. He loses consciousness trying to free himself.

EPISODE FOUR.

A MARINE MIRACLE.

To those who were left behind on the J-5 when Tommy Hale set out upon his desperate venture beneath the sea the time that followed his departure was one of increasing anxiety that soon gave way to sheer, stark terror.

Suddenly, without the least warning, they were shaken by a fearful shock. The great submarine was rocked to and fro, the waters all about them were violently agitated. And as they looked down, the sunken Monarch seemed to fly apart.

"They dynamited her! My God!" cried Ferguson. "They weren't content to leave him there to die. They took no chance of having him escape!"

Graham Hale collapsed utterly. In caring for him, with Ferguson's help, Aimée was able to keep some sort of command of herself. And while she bathed his temples, Ferguson turned away, sadly.

"We can do no good by staying here, Miss Villon," he said. "The Sea Crawler has made off. I think it is our duty to society and to that brave boy, young Hale, to give chase. If we can't save him, we may at least punish those who killed him."

"I suppose you must be right," she said. "We must do what we can, and they must certainly be punished."

Ferguson's voice rang out then as he gave the order to rise. Slowly the J-5 made her way to the surface and emerged. An empty waste of waters rewarded Ferguson's gaze when he went on deck. Aimée followed him and joined him in sweeping sea and sky with her eyes.

"O!" screamed Aimée suddenly. "Look, lieutenant, over there——! See, what's that in the water—?"

As they stared a diving helmet was flung into the air. And the next moment, perhaps a hundred feet away, a figure appeared, the struggling figure of a swimmer, heavily weighted, borne down. Ferguson roared his orders; sprang to the instruments in his conning tower to change the course of the J-5. And at full speed she veered and approached the struggling figure, which, clinging to a bit of wreckage flung up by the explosion that had shattered the Monarch, was floating nearby.

"Tommy!" screamed Aimée. "It—it is Tommy!" She called down the opening in the deck. "Mr. Hale! Mr. Hale, come up here! Tommy—he's safe—we'll have him aboard in a minute—he's escaped!"

Graham Hale came up, his weakness banished by the news Aimée had shouted to him. With tears of thankfulness streaming down his cheeks he stared at the figure of his son, clinging to the wreckage. He was one of those who helped Tommy aboard the J-5—and one of those who carried him, fainting, down below, to be wrapped in hot blankets and placed tenderly in Ferguson's own bunk.

Tommy's faint was not prolonged. When he recovered it was to see Aimée and his father bending over him.

"Hello!" he said, weakly. He grinned, and Aimée's eyes filled with tears. "Don't look so glum, you two! I'm all right. I feel fine! I—gee, you must have been scared to death! I kept thinking about you when it looked as if they really had me!"

"Tell us what happened—if you're strong enough," said Aimée. "O, Tommy—I was so frightened!"

"It was pretty bad," he confessed. "I—well, I was scared myself. I thought they had me. It looked as if there wasn't a chance for me! Did you see how they attacked us?"

"They dynamited her."

"Yes," said his father. "Until you were pushed through the hole in the Monarch's side. After that, of course, we lost sight of you. We didn't see you again until you shot up to the surface and Aimée, bless her, spotted you."

"They dynamited the wreck," said Ferguson, who had come in to hear Tommy's story.

"I figured that out afterward," said Tommy. "Gee! I suppose you people thought that that was my everlasting finish, didn't you? I guess they meant it to be, too! But it worked just the other way. Because, when I came to my senses again I was all tangled up with a lot of wreckage, but I was able to work myself clear, and the strong room had been blown to pieces. I could move around, and I did, groping about. Then I got rid of the chest and back weights I had on and worked my feet free from the weighted shoes—and I shot right up to the surface like a cork! I never was so glad of anything in my life as to be able to get rid of my helmet!

"And just half a dozen feet away there was that bit of wreckage, a cabin door, it was, I think, that I must have been hanging onto when you picked me up. I saw you coming. I could see Aimée waving to me. That's the last thing I remember. I must have fainted then, like a juggins——"

"You'd been through enough to make any one faint," said Aimée, stoutly. "Tommy, you must rest now. You mustn't talk any more——"

"I've got to know one thing!" said Tommy. "Did you catch them? The Twisted Thread gang in the Sea Crawler?"

"Not yet," said Ferguson, grimly. "But we're after them. And I think they'll have trouble getting away from us!"

Tommy turned over with a groan.

"We've got to catch them!" he said. "I can't bear the thought of letting them get away with their loot!"

"Don't worry," said Ferguson. "They're up against the United States navy now!"

"You've got to rest!" said Aimée with a pretty show of authority. "Or else you'll be put under arrest and kept down here when we overtake the Sea Crawler! Won't he, Lieutenant Ferguson?"

"I think I can promise to take orders from you to that extent, Miss Villon," said the officer, gallantly.

"We'll call you as soon as there's any sign of the Crawler, Tommy," said Graham Hale. "Your duty now is to get back your strength so that you can be of service when there's real need of you."

"All right," said Tommy. "I'll try to keep quiet. But I want to get at those people and get back at them for the scare they gave me!"

"I've called by wireless for an instant report of any strange submarine," said Ferguson. "All ships carrying wireless in these water have received my message and they'll be keeping a sharp lookout. But, of course, it's not going to be easy to pick up the Crawler. I'm counting more on the coast guard—they'll keep a careful watch, and the gangsters will have to be mighty smart to get ashore with their gold without being seen and arrested."

But, in the end, it was the lookout of the J-5 who finally reported the first sign of the Sea Crawler. Oil on the water betrayed the passage of a submarine, and five minutes later a cry from the bow aroused every one.

"Periscope two points to starboard, sir!"

Ferguson, glass in hand, peered in the direction the lookout had named.

"He's right!" he cried. "There she is, running submerged! They've probably seen us through their periscope, and they'll take no chance of coming to the surface now! But we've got them, just the same! They'll never get away from us now!"

His orders flew like hail. The deck gun was trained on the Crawler's periscope, and a shell went screaming toward it. But the periscope was a tiny mark; it was difficult, if not impossible, to get a good shot, so low in the water was the J-5 herself.

Shot after shot was fired. And then came a cry from the lookout.

"Torpedo fired from the chase, sir! Coming toward us!"

"I never thought they'd be able to do that!" cried Ferguson. He began to shout his orders; the J-5 swerved and avoided the first torpedo. But as if his maneuver had been anticipated, another had been launched, and this one was seen too late for escape.

"All hands on deck—overboard, every one!" shouted Ferguson. "They've got us. We'll be better off in the water!"

He was obeyed instantly. Aimée and Tommy went over together, with Mr. Hale a jump behind them. And in a moment there was a deafening explosion, and the J-5, struck squarely amidship, was shattered. The suction was enough to drag Aimée back as the J-5 sank; she was separated from Tommy. But she was not afraid; many craft of those in the neighborhood must, she knew, have seen the disaster. Help was sure to come quickly. And she was a strong swimmer, capable of keeping herself afloat for many hours in the warm water in which she was now swimming. She had no great fear for Tommy, even after his frightful experience; his present danger was so slight a thing, compared to the deadly peril through which he had won to safety, that it could almost be laughed at.

And now the Sea Crawler, relieved of the fear of the 8-5 and its gun, emerged from the water and began to move toward her on the surface. Here was a new danger, and one she had not reckoned with. She turned and began to swim, desperately and without a thought of conserving her energy, away from the submarine.

But her effort was useless. She had been seen from the Crawler's deck, and before long, in spite of her utmost endeavors, she was overtaken and drawn aboard.

Down went the Crawler, clear down to the bottom. There she remained until night, when she rose, and displayed a curious signal—five colored flares. These were answered, and soon a yacht came up and sent a boat, in which the members of The Twisted Thread and the crew of the Crawler, with Aimée, were transferred to the larger vessel. Then the Crawler, having served her turn, was sent down, untenanted.

Aimée said nothing. Secretly, she was rather relieved to feel that she was, in a sense, under the protection of the leader, who was addressed by the others as Quinn. He was, she knew, a great villain, but he had good manners and was evidently anxious to be as pleasant as possible. And there was one youth, called Ralph Green by his companions, who looked at her in a way that made her shiver. His small, evil eyes devoured her; he seemed to be fascinated by her.

The landing was made late that night. Aimée was blindfolded, but she knew that she was being hurried through city streets in a motor car, and at last she managed so to work the bandage that blinded her as to be able to catch a glimpse of a street sign now and then. She discovered that she was being carried through the tortuous maze of streets in Greenwich Village, far down on the lower west side of New York, and when the car stopped and she was taken into a house she knew its number and the name of the street, Varick street. Dull sounds of blasting nearby confirmed her knowledge. Tommy had told her of the new subway that was being built in this vicinity.

"I'm afraid we can't make you comfortable here, at least, we can't make you as comfortable as we wish we could," Quinn told her. "You'll have to remain in this room"—she had been taken to the top floor of the house—"until we can find more suitable quarters for you."

But, at least, the bandage was removed from her eyes. The morning light was beginning to come in, and she could look about the old, dirty room in which she was shut up. It had a single window, heavily barred, and high in the wall; there was an old, tumbledown bureau, a cot, and a chair. Comforts it did not afford. But she was tired enough to lie down on the cot and young and healthy enough to fall at once into a dreamless sleep.

She was aroused by the turning of a key in the lock of her door. She sat bolt upright on her cot, forgetting for a moment where she was. It was not Quinn who came in, bearing food, for which she discovered, as she saw it, that she had a real craving, but the one man among her captors whom she feared, the one called Ralph Green.

"Hello, cutie," he said, insolently. "Sleep well? See, I brought your breakfast."

He set down the tray he carried and stared at her. She returned his look.

"Well, don't I get a thank you?" he asked.

"I don't see why you should," she said. "I want to see your leader and to be freed."

"I guess you'll have to take it out in wanting both ways," he said. "Well, if I don't get any thanks, how about a kiss?"

He moved toward her, an evil light in his eyes. She shrank away; cried out.

"Keep away from me, you beast—"

"I'll teach you to call me names!" he snarled. I'll teach you who's boss around here—"

He tried to seize her. But he had not reckoned with the wiry strength of her slight frame. She eluded him; picked up the chair; used it as a club, and beat him away from her. He gave ground in his surprise; she pressed her advantage, and forced him through the door. Before he could recover she had slammed it and shot home the bolts that, luckily for her, gave her a chance to bar him out.

At once he began a furious assault on the door. But suddenly he stopped.

"All right, coming!" he shouted. Then, in a lower voice: "But I'll come back, my lady!"

Sheer terror gripped her now. This was the one thing she could really fear. She looked about her; using all her strength, dragged bed and bureau before the door to form a barricade. They might check him for a time, reinforce the bolts, if he did return, she thought.

Then she looked about. She tore a piece of linen from her sleeve; picked up a piece of wood, charred it in the flame of a gas jet that had lighted the attic room during the night, wrote on the torn linen.

"Graham Hale," she wrote—knowing that that was address enough. "At 16 Varick street in attic. Help. Aimée."

There was just room enough between the bars of the window for her to drop the note out. She raised herself then, by standing on the chair, and stared out after her note as it dropped to the street. It fluttered down. People were passing every minute; a policeman was near by. Surely some one must pick up her appeal for help and read it!

But passer-by after passer-by spurned it with hurrying feet. The policeman walked right over it. Then a little girl came; a bedraggled, untidy looking child, carrying a rag doll. She saw the note and picked it up. But what she saw was not a desperate appeal for help, but a petticoat for that sad looking doll of hers! Aimée groaned as she saw the child make off, happily, carrying with her what had been Aimée's one chance for safety.

Then her heart leaped. The policeman bent down as the child passed to admire the doll. He held the precious note in his hand. But Aimée cried out in agony as he handed the doll back, never seeing the writing upon that improvised petticoat.

There was a sound outside. The door was being tried. The voice of the man called Ralph Green came to her ears.

"Open that door in there! If I have to break it in it will be the worse for you!"

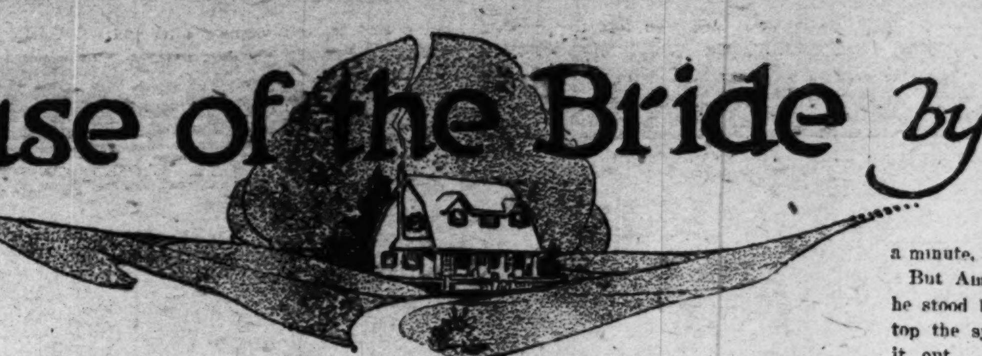
The House of the Bride

by ALICE BROWN



He Built a Nest for His Mate But She Never Came and——

ANSEL JAMES, at 5 o'clock of the summer afternoon, was in the new house, measuring for a corner shelf. He was a robust fellow, something over 30, with aquiline features and a skin brown and tightly drawn. His blue eyes looked out steadily from their background of tan and seemed the keener for it, like the eyes of all men who live much in the open. He had been thinking about the possibility of the shelf all day while he mowed the east meadow and answered mechanically the pleasantries of the other men. Ansel was much prized by his fellows, but they never hesitated in pelting him with all degrees of banter, because his attention, they knew, was absent, and he never really cared. Actually, his mind was on the new house, so perfect now, except for the furniture which would probably never be moved in, that it was hard for him to find place for another addition to its practical uses and its charm.

People were gentle with him over his worship of it. They even refrained from asking, "What you going to do with your house?" when they heard his engagement to Hatty Slate was broken. They were too sorry for Ansel. Hatty Slate was not, they thought, "much consequence," but Ansel must have built a gem of a house with a soapstone sink and multitudinous closets, "all complete." But no one could tell what Ansel felt, not even the uncle and aunt living in his old home "up the road a piece," and whom he had meant to leave when he went into a house of his own.

All that was certain about his side of the affair was that he tended and dressed the house now as if he were adorning it for a bride, fitting it with magic contrivances, all to make a woman's work easier. One night even, Abel Fellows, going past at something after 11, saw a light there and thought somebody had broken in. So he tiptoed up to the kitchen window and peeped, and there was Ansel, face flushed and hair in a tangle, rubbing down wainscoting as if he had been at it for hours and meant never to stop.

But this moment of the corner shelf was one of the last ones out of the stillest summer day, full of green leaves and birds. Ansel had taken a lingering look at the world before coming in, for he knew he should work late. A feeling of solitude was upon him, and an intimate sense of communion with his house. He always had that when he was alone here, whether it was because the house had been the work of his hands or that it rehearsed an unfinished dream, not even he could say. But he had no sooner taken up his plane to run it along the strip of board under his hand, than a step struck the porch floor.

At that he frowned, though as the door opened and some one stood there to bid his eyes receive her before she spoke, he had assumed his old attitude of indifferent calm. But when he looked up at her, Ansel did start. This was Janet Gale who lived "down the road" a mile away. She had come within the year to be with Gran'ma Gale, and Ansel did not know her well. But he had seen her at church and walking along the country road, taller and of finer build than one of the neighborhood, and almost to be afraid of, too, with her calm soft colored face and her large, deep eyes.

The eyes were what spoke and dominated. They were a living power, and even a startling one because their darkness shone so from the cloud of her soft, light hair. Once, at the celebration of the town's two hundredth anniversary, Ansel had stood with her for a difficult ten minutes in a tableau of the first settler and his wife. They two had been chosen because they made, so the neighborhood said, such a likely pair, and they had accepted the call with simplicity, as they did all evident duties.

Today Janet had come with a purpose, and she did not hesitate in running for it straight.

"I wanted to ask you something, Mr. James. Gran'ma said it wasn't my place, but I thought I'd rather be the one."

Ansel was looking at her in a kind of alarmed surprise she could not understand. He seemed to come to some sense of his own working disarray, and pushed his fingers up through his hair.

"Won't you sit down?" he asked.

There was one chair, a rough kitchen one, sometimes to be sawed on, sometimes piled with nails and cleats. She shook her head briefly and continued:

"No. I've only come for a minute. Mr. James, it's about your house." There she flushed, for she had evidently felt her feet to be on ticklish ground. Ansel frowned a little and stood immovable, facing her. Whoever paved the way to talk, it would not be he. This she realized, and herself frowned with the sudden difficulty of it. But she was a young woman of direct address, and threw down obstacles by a dash and onset. "Mr. James, maybe you didn't know I was engaged to Oscar French." Here she did hesitate, conformably, as if such things were not usually offered with so crude a haste. Ansel nodded and looked at her the more intently, trying, apparently, to make her out. Having got over the introductory step she was more at ease, and took her course with a clear directness. "I haven't seen him for over a year. He's been workin' in Illinois. But he thinks he'll come home."

"Oh!" Ansel accorded.

"He wants to come here to live, maybe set up a shop, or get a piece of land and keep bees. I don't know how it'll turn out." She forgot him for a moment, he could see, her fine brows knitted in consideration of the doubtful question of bees and their swarming, and the price of honey. "Well!" she recalled herself and turned to him with a sudden smile. It warmed her face wonderfully, and moved his heart, too, in a way quite aside from her simple purposes. "Well, if we settle down here, the first thing'll be a house."

"I see," said Ansel, gravely. "I see." now, one hand resting on his bench, the other at his side, a perfect picture of the artisan in repose. She began again and now she hurried.

"I thought of your house. I couldn't help thinkin' of it. It's the prettiest house I ever saw in my life, and gran'ma said maybe you'd sell or let. But she said it wasn't my place to ask you. She said 'twas a man's place. But there's Oscar way out in Illinois, and here I am on the spot."

It seemed a perfect reason, especially when she looked at him in that soft, kind way.

"I see," said Ansel again, slowly. "You want to hire my house."

"Hire it or buy it. I couldn't say about buyin'. Oscar never's gone as far as that. I don't know—" She hesitated an embarrassed moment, but with certain dignity went on. "I don't know whether he could. I don't know exactly how Oscar's fixed."

Ansel found himself wanting to leap off here at a tangent and ask her whether she was going to marry a man she estimated at a random guess. But he pulled himself back to the house.

"Let or sell," he said, "I s'pose it's all one to me. It ain't likely I shall ever go into the house." But his face contracted, as he said it, and she hastened on.

"Gran'ma said you told her so. 'Twas when she offered you some balm and wormwood. If you hadn't said as much as that, I never'd asked you."

Ansel smiled a little.

"Wormwood's all right," he corrected, with his gentle humor, "for a house a man builds and never lives in. "Well!" He shook his head, as if he threw off deadening dreams. "Want to go over it?" he asked, abruptly. "Want to see the house?"

She brightened at that, and came at once out of her perplexity of wondering whether she ought to be in the business at all. So they began their slow and admiring progress, for Ansel was as frankly eager over it as she. He showed her all his little devices for beauty and for saving work, and pointed out the window he had cut after there seemed to be windows enough, to bring the tip of the big maple into the bedroom. When they went upstairs and he opened the drawers of the linen closet, fragrant with new wood, she began to feel the excitement of the bride, an emotion made up of delight in the things themselves and a sense of the strangeness of it all. She had not dwelt much on the overthrow of his hopes. Gran'ma, so old that her opinions got easily blurred and their expression rather negative, had said only that Ansel had meant to get married, and she guessed it never came to anything, and Janet, instinctively solitary in her habit of life, had asked no one else.

Finally, they went "up attic," and Ansel took her to the big dormer he had thrown out at the back, just, he told her, to face Mount Everlasting. And there, by natural consent, they sat down on the window seat and followed the purple outline in the farthest sky. Janet recalled her gaze. She was looking straight at him now, and her eyes drew his. He thought he had never seen such soft, dark eyes except in some kind animal, and he almost forgot Janet herself in regarding them, as if they were a separate source of power and life. Janet, calm as she was by nature, looked very vivid. She was, Ansel saw, in love with the house. He, too, was in love with it, and he felt the reasonableness of their accord.

"Well," she said, as if she could not hold silence any longer, her desire was so big, 'goin' to let me have it?"

Ansel did not answer. It hardly seemed important, compared with the riddle of her eyes.

"Am I," said Janet, imperatively, "am I goin' to have it?"

That recalled him. He seemed to catch himself back out of some deep musing.

"I'd rather you'd have it," he said, "than anybody else."

"Then may I?"

"Anybody I know of," he clenched it, and then with a headlong haste, "anybody in the world."

That surprised her, and her eyes gravely questioned.

"But I don't know," said Ansel, also recalled perhaps by his own intemperate speech. "I've got to think about it."

She rose at that, her mission being over, and the dusk outside shutting out Mount Everlasting more and more and so advising her that the reason for being there was done.

"Well," she said, "you think about it."

"Be careful of the stairs," Ansel bade her, and she returned with a joyous note in her voice:

"Anybody couldn't fall on these stairs. I don't believe gran'ma could. They're so easy, and the rail's just in the right place."

Ansel knew the meaning of that tone. She loved the house and thought it was almost hers.

When he stood in the doorway watching her down the steps, he called out suddenly and she stopped.

"Wait a minute," said Ansel. "When's it goin' to be?"

She stood there, almost a heroic figure in the dusk.

"When's what goin' to be?" she parried in the thrilling voice responsive to that nearing change.

"The weddin'. When's he comin' on?"

"In about a month," said Janet. That's when he's comin' on."

Then the dusk enveloped her. Ansel went in, not to work, but to think it over. The little shelf he laid aside. It was not finished that night or the next. Indeed, it was not put up for months, until a winter day when he was still thinking of these things, but after another fashion. The next night he brushed his hair rigorously and went up to see her. Janet was sitting on the steps of the little low browed house, and gran'ma, her chair drawn close to the entry sill, dozed and dropped a few words at intervals, like leaves from an autumn tree. But Janet, in her white dress, looked like the spring itself, a tree all over bridal white, and so Ansel thought, in other terms, as he came up the path and saw her rise to meet him.

"Good evening," she said, in her sweet, full voice. "Gran'ma, here's Mr. James."

"That you, Ansel?" gran'ma asked, from the depths of her revery. "Well, you better come in, both o' you. It's gettin' damp. I guess I'll poke off to bed."

"You leave your chair," Janet bade her. "I'll fetch it in when I come. We'll sit here a minute, it's so nice."

But Ansel did not sit at once. Instead, he stood before her, his tall bulk seeming to top the syringa down by the gate and shut it out. But its breath came sweetly to them.

"When d'you say he's comin'?" he asked abruptly.

"In about a month." Her heart beat hard. Janet was a calm creature, but sometimes she wanted things very much.

"I s'pose we needn't mention it to anybody, need we?" Ansel was continuing. "We needn't mention it till then. I hate talk."

"Why, no," said Janet, wondering a little but thinking it reasonable of him. "I don't see's we need to mention it."

"Not to gran'ma?"

"Not if you don't want I should."

"Well, I don't," said Ansel. He drew a breath of greater ease. "I get so tired of the clack. If you could only do anything and done with it! But you can't. It's 'Why do ye so?' north, east, south, and west. It's like a flock of blackbirds."

Janet gave a little laugh. It had more than the music of her speech.

"But I ain't got anything to tell," she said, "not yet."

He answered soberly, with a grave indulgence, as to a beseeching child.

"Well, I guess you'll get it."

"Get the house? Shall I get the house?"

"I guess so." She drew a long, happy breath, and he saw again how much she cared.

"We can keep our own counsel," he said, "till he comes and the papers are passed. Or if he rents it—it's all one to me."

Janet could simply say nothing at all. They sat there in the soft summer night, she very happy indeed and he, happy, in a way, because the house was, after all, fulfilling its purpose and coming to beautiful use. He was the first to speak.

"Well," he said, softly, "you've got your house." Janet put out her hand to him in the darkness, and he gave it a strong quick clasp. "That's right," he said. "Shake hands on it. It's a bargain." Ansel was a man of few words, except when he was deeply moved, yet he had a little more to say, of a solemn import as befitted the sacredness of the hour. "I hope it'll be blessed to you," he ended, in what used to be his father's prayer-meeting manner. "I hope you'll live in it a great many years."

He stopped abruptly, because he had a sudden vision then of the Janet she would be sometime with her children about her, always calm, and miraculously young. But this was too swift a pace. It made him light headed, and he returned, impatient of it, to what was. "Now," said he, "as you think it over, is there any changes you'd like made?"

"Oh, no," said Janet, fervently. "It's lovely, just as it is. It's a perfect house."

"I can't find much fault with it myself," said Ansel, in the tone of disparaging pride accorded to our best beloved. "There's the lilacs, now. I set out four, three purple and one white, right side the back door. I didn't know's I called attention to them."

She hadn't thought of them, she owned. She had been too occupied with walls and windows.

"Were you anyways interested in a mite of a garden?"

This he put almost timidly, fearing, it seemed, lest her answer should not fit his wish.

"Yes," said Janet, "there's got to be a garden. You know, it seems if it happened for all the world as if 'twas meant, gran'ma's got so out with hers. She says she can't 'tend to it, and it sort of frets her to have other folks fiddlin' round it, and realize she can't. So she's goin' to give me her perennials if I got a house anywheres round here."

"Well," said Ansel, in his quiet way, "come fall, you can move it lock, stock and barrel. I'll kind o' get the beds ready, too, any time now, and mebbe put a fence round. You'd like that, I guess, and a little gate for you to go steppin' through. You walk down that way to-morrer night after work and see if I've picked out the right spot."

"But you don' want the folks to know. What'll they think if they go by and see me?"

The next day it came about as he had Janet, perhaps too proud to go by when eyes could be evaded, appeared in late afternoon, as soon as there was hope finding him. Ansel had staked out a good-plot at the back of the house. Here were be her flowers, and behind them he had ed the kitchen garden. Just as she came und the corner, her face alight, her hair ive in the sun, Ansel had stopped to verify his corners, and he looked up and saw her.
He caught his breath, she was so alive and lovely, so calm, too, a part of the divineness of the dying day; but he asked her quietly:

"How's this seem to you?"

"It's nice," she told him. "It's the right place exactly. But you think it's big enough?"

Ansel laughed a little at her greediness.

"You goin' to take care of it yourself?"
he asked her.

"Oh, yes. I'm just like gran'ma. I don't want folks fiddlin' round among my plants. Besides, I don't know—" Here she stopped, and her face grew almost whimsically aghast.

"What don't you know?"

"I don't know whether he cares anything about gardenin'. He's always worked in a store."

Ansel turned abruptly and paced the inner boundary once and back again.

"Well," he said, as if he had been thinking out something and quieting himself to a conclusion, "I guess, whether he cares about gardens, he'll be ready to do the heft of it for you."

"Is there a gate here?" He saw she was standing already in her garden. She even seemed to see the invisible gate. He also stood in the inclosure not yet made, and for a moment tasted the delight of feeling, not that he was sacrificing something to a happiness he could never share, but that the garden still his because she let him plan it for
.

"Yes," he said, "a little gate, green, le narrow, so's to swing easy over the y."

Janet stood there dreamily, still looking, it ed, at the garden not yet born, at other things hastening toward her, and the who was the god to summon them. An-followed her thought, and stood very still.

"Well," she said, abruptly coming out of dream. "I'll be goin'. But half way to road she turned and hastened back. Her was flushed in a delicate way it had, eeping of color under the roseate skin.
held her hand over her eyes to shield from the burning sunset, and looked at with a soft, warm kindliness. "I ain't ed you enough," she said. "I can't ever
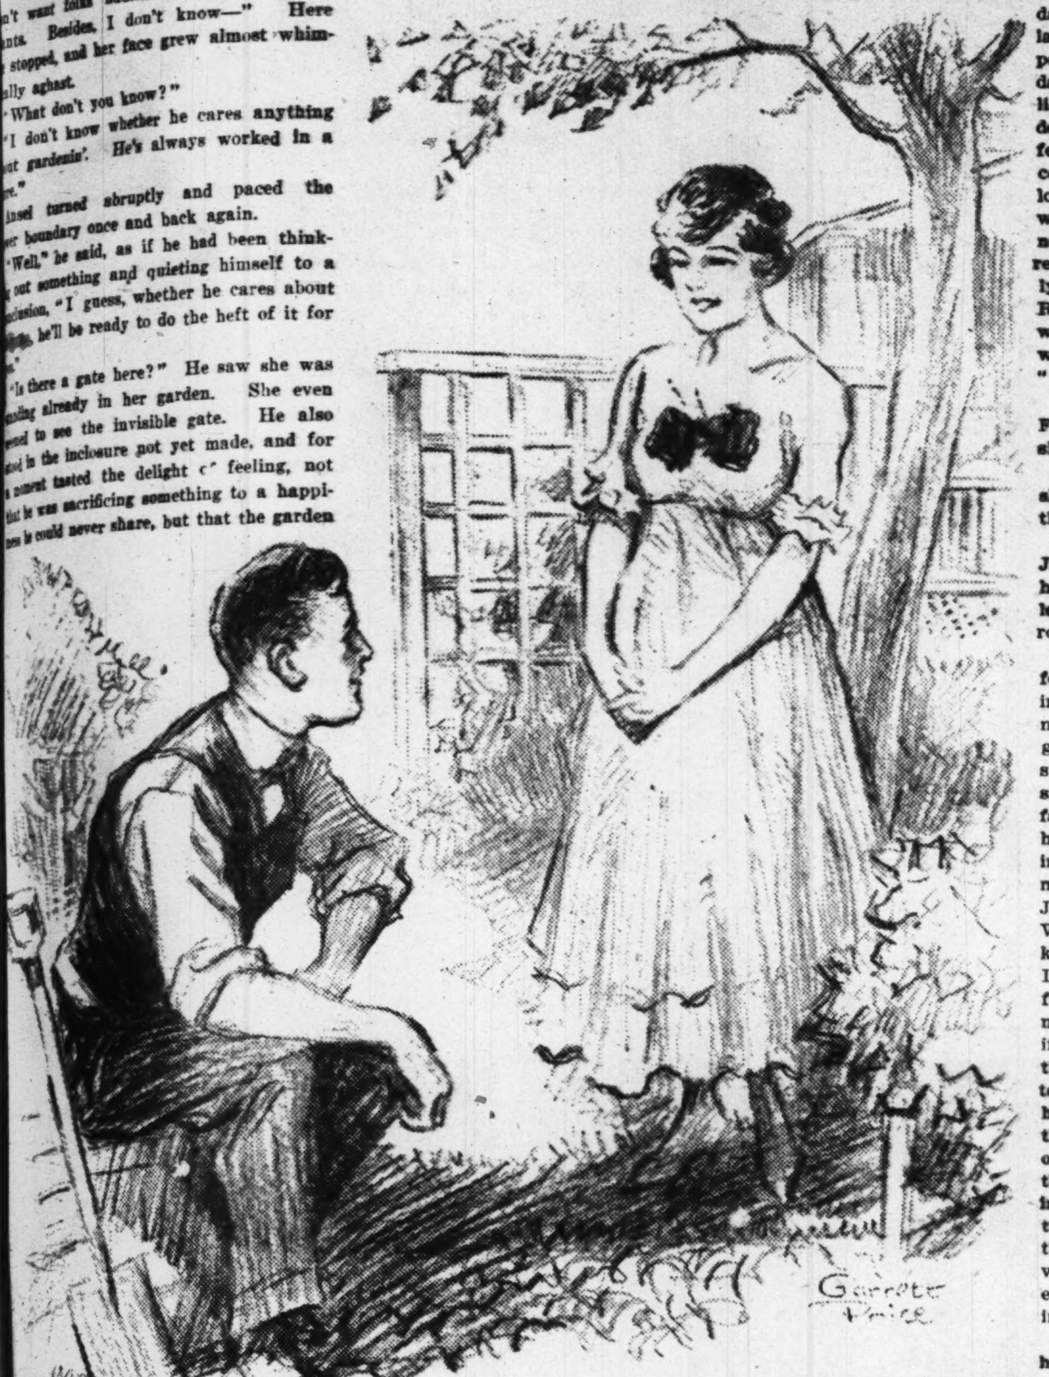
you."

Then she turned decisively and went.

Ansel stood, after she had left the garden, lonely, and himself looked off into the sunset, fading now, yet entrancing in isles and lakes of color, mountains, and a green-blue bordering shore. He had a fanciful habit of thought, and it seemed to him now that his grandfather who, being old, had uttered many uncomprehended things to him, then a boy, had known what he was saying when he told him, concerning the scheme of all things, "It's a mystery. It's a dinged mystery." Here Ansel had built his house and been denied the living in it, and now he was seeing the happiness that enwrapped it like great guardian wings, through other eyes. And actually through her eyes—for he felt he knew, by some secret divination, the course of her days here, her progress from one room to another, and her long still hours of work in the garden by the earliest light. She would know enough for that. She had learned unerringly, he could see, the ways of doing things. And perhaps he should see her when he went by on some early quest, and step in a minute, and she would look up from under the pear tree, again with that rosy gratitude.



"He caught his breath, she was so alive and lovely."

For a month it went on, the last exquisite ordering of the house and the inclosure of the garden. The beds were made, the fence was painted green, and the little gate swung easily, yet with security. Neighbors dropped in to admire the completeness of it all, and to venture irrepressible questions. "What you goin' to do with your house, Ansel?" they asked him boldly. "You goin' to live in it?" But they were never told, and Janet, when one astute old body inquired why she was pokin' round there so much, replied, with her head held high, that it was the nicest house she ever saw or anybody else, either, and she was bewitched with it. She couldn't hardly keep her feet away from it. And when the month was over, Oscar French came. Ansel had walked up to gran'ma's the night before and given Janet the key.

"You better have this," he said. "You'll want to show him around."

She nodded silently, and Ansel knew he had done the irrevocable deed. He had locked himself outside. This was Thursday, and Friday afternoon he saw her go past in Beasley's wagon, driving to the station, he knew, and he felt vaguely hurt that she had not asked him for his own team. But when she came back he was down in the lower pasture, and Saturday morning early he went there again with his dinner pail and ax, and spent the day. It was a long day, wherein he felt removed from the world and all the conditions of it. He had done the very largest thing that had ever been his choice, and by doing it he had cut himself off from the smaller pleasures and inheritances.

He knew definitely now that he should never settle anywhere. He could never have a house like this one, raised and finished by his youth and hope and the best part of his brain; therefore he would have no house at all. Life looked to him dun colored, full of the sounding of a solemn voice that had bidden him step aside and let love enter where disappointment had built the door. He went home that night a sadder man, different, older, it seemed to him, and because the day had tired him, he slipped into bed early and dulled his mind of thought. Sunday morning he was late at the table and portly Aunt Lindy, dallying there as she liked an excuse for doing, poured his coffee and settled to a cozy gossip. She loved to endow him with her accumulated nothings because he received them patiently, not like Uncle Rufus, her husband, who had sciatica, and was prone to say "There! there!"

"D'you know Oscar French was here?" she asked.

Ansel nodded, but she hardly needed that slight lubricant.

"Come Friday, Janet went over after him. Handsome feller, straight as a ramrod, I see 'em ride by."

Ansel drank his coffee, and found, by an involuntary hatefulness of the mind, a god-like youth, straight as a ramrod, sitting in the grandfather chair beside his hearth. At that instant, it seemed almost too hard a thing Janet had asked him. When he could in kindness escape Aunt Lindy's monologue, full of speculation now over what Janet, if she should marry this fall, was likely to do about gran'ma, he wandered out into the woods at the back of the house and sat there whittling, making little dooryards of twigs and brushing them away again when he found whither his mind was tending.

It came to him that he could not for the first time since his building of it, go into his own house; another man had the key and it was impossible to meet him there. But about sunset that night it seemed to him unnecessary to bear it any more. It was probable that they would have visited the house by daylight. This was his hour, as it always had been, the coming dusk when tasks were done and he could take refuge in the stronghold of serenity he had made, as some patient creature might, grain by grain, build its own fitting shell.

So he went across lots, the back way, and approached the house stealthily almost, through the little garden. He mounted the steps to the back porch. It was very still. He took out his knife and slipped it in at a crack of the door to turn a button he knew, and walked in. Ansel drew a breath of satisfaction. It was his house, something sentient almost, that seemed to return his love, as gardens breathe out rapture toward the hand that tends them. He sank down on his bench, moved into a corner to leave a garnished order for the coming bridegroom; but that instant he started up again. There was the turning of a key, and some one whirled tempestuously in. He knew who it was, and that no one was behind her. Janet had changed into a creature of wild yet still emotion. She spoke at once.

"I had to come. I had to have some place so gran'ma shouldn't know."

Some place to cry, he saw, to quiet her racing pulses and still the blood aflame up to her hair. She began to pace back and forth from the hearth to the doorway, like an animal in bounds.

"What is it?" asked Ansel, when she seemed to have walked herself into a calm. "You tell me what it is."

"He's gone," said Janet.

"Gone?" he echoed, his own emotion rising, anger for her, resentment against the fool who had deserted her. "You give me half a day. I'll fetch him back to you."

"Fetch him back!" She stopped and looked at him superbly. "He's gone. I sent him."

"You sent him? What for, Janet, what for?"

She cried a little then, in shame, it almost seemed, as if she blamed herself.

"For nothing. He hadn't done anything. He was just himself. But I don't like him."

Ansel, in his daze, felt that he could only repeat her words after her, in a foolish interrogative echo. But she was ready enough to tell.

"I've got to speak to somebody or I shall die. I'm so ashamed. How could I ever think I liked him? Why, he talks about gettin' cold—he talks about it all the time—and what lodges he belongs to. I don't like him, that's all there is about it. I just don't like him." Fair, large creature as she was, she looked like a willful child. "He hates gardenin', too," she threw at him. "He thinks you get your ankles dusty."

"Well," said Ansel. His voice sounded hoarse and strained to him, and he stopped to clear it. "What about the house? What'd he say to that?"

"The house?" She looked at him in the amazement that kept her head so high. "You s'pose I brought him in here? You s'pose I'd take him into this house? Why, it's your house, not his."

Ansel was beside himself before the power of her proud beauty and the thrilling force of her emotion.

"It ain't my house," he cried. "It's yours. You've got to live in it."

Janet calmed at that; she smiled, and shook her head.

"You're sorry for me," she told him. "No, you mustn't be so sorry as all that. Sometime you'll live in the house yourself. That's the best way. It's your house. Here's the key. I'm goin' now. Good-night."

But Ansel reached the door first and stood with his back against it.

"Look here," said he, roughly, she thought, unlike his gentle self, "do you want to know why I ain't livin' in this house today?"

"Never mind," she said, gently. "I've got to go now."

"I do mind," said Ansel. "You've got to mind, too. You've got to listen. The girl I was engaged to broke off with me for one reason. Want to know what it was? 'Twas you. You were the reason."

"Me, Ansel?"

She had used his name unthinkingly, and neither of them noticed.

"Yes, you. That time I stood holdin' your hand in the town hall I trembled all over, you were so—so different. And I couldn't help talkin' about you. I couldn't keep your name off my lips. And I dreamed about you, and when I thought you were goin' anywheres, I wouldn't go, for I couldn't see you. I didn't dare to. And the girl I was engaged to said to me right out, 'You're in love with Janet Gale.'"

She had grown quite white, and her breath came heavily. But her eyes did not leave his face, nor did his cease to hold them.

"And when she said that to me," he went on in what seemed his rage at the overwhelmingness of the tide of life, "I said, 'I am, God help me, I am.' And she said, 'She's engaged to another man. What you goin' to do?' And I says, 'Nothin'. There's nothin' for me to do.'"

Again their eyes seemed to interrogate each other sternly.

"But there's somethin' to do now," Ansel continued. He threw back his head and laughed. Janet thought she had never imagined how he would look if he were happy. "I can give you the house—your house. You and gran'ma can live in it, and I can tend the garden, and by and by, when you can think of a man, who knows——"

He paused, dumb with the coming wonder of it, but Janet knew no staying. She was one of the women who, having something to give, must pour it out at once.

"Why, don't you see? Ansel, don't you see? I couldn't have him live in your house. 'Twas because 'twas your house. 'Twas because we'd got so well acquainted, Ansel. Don't you see?"

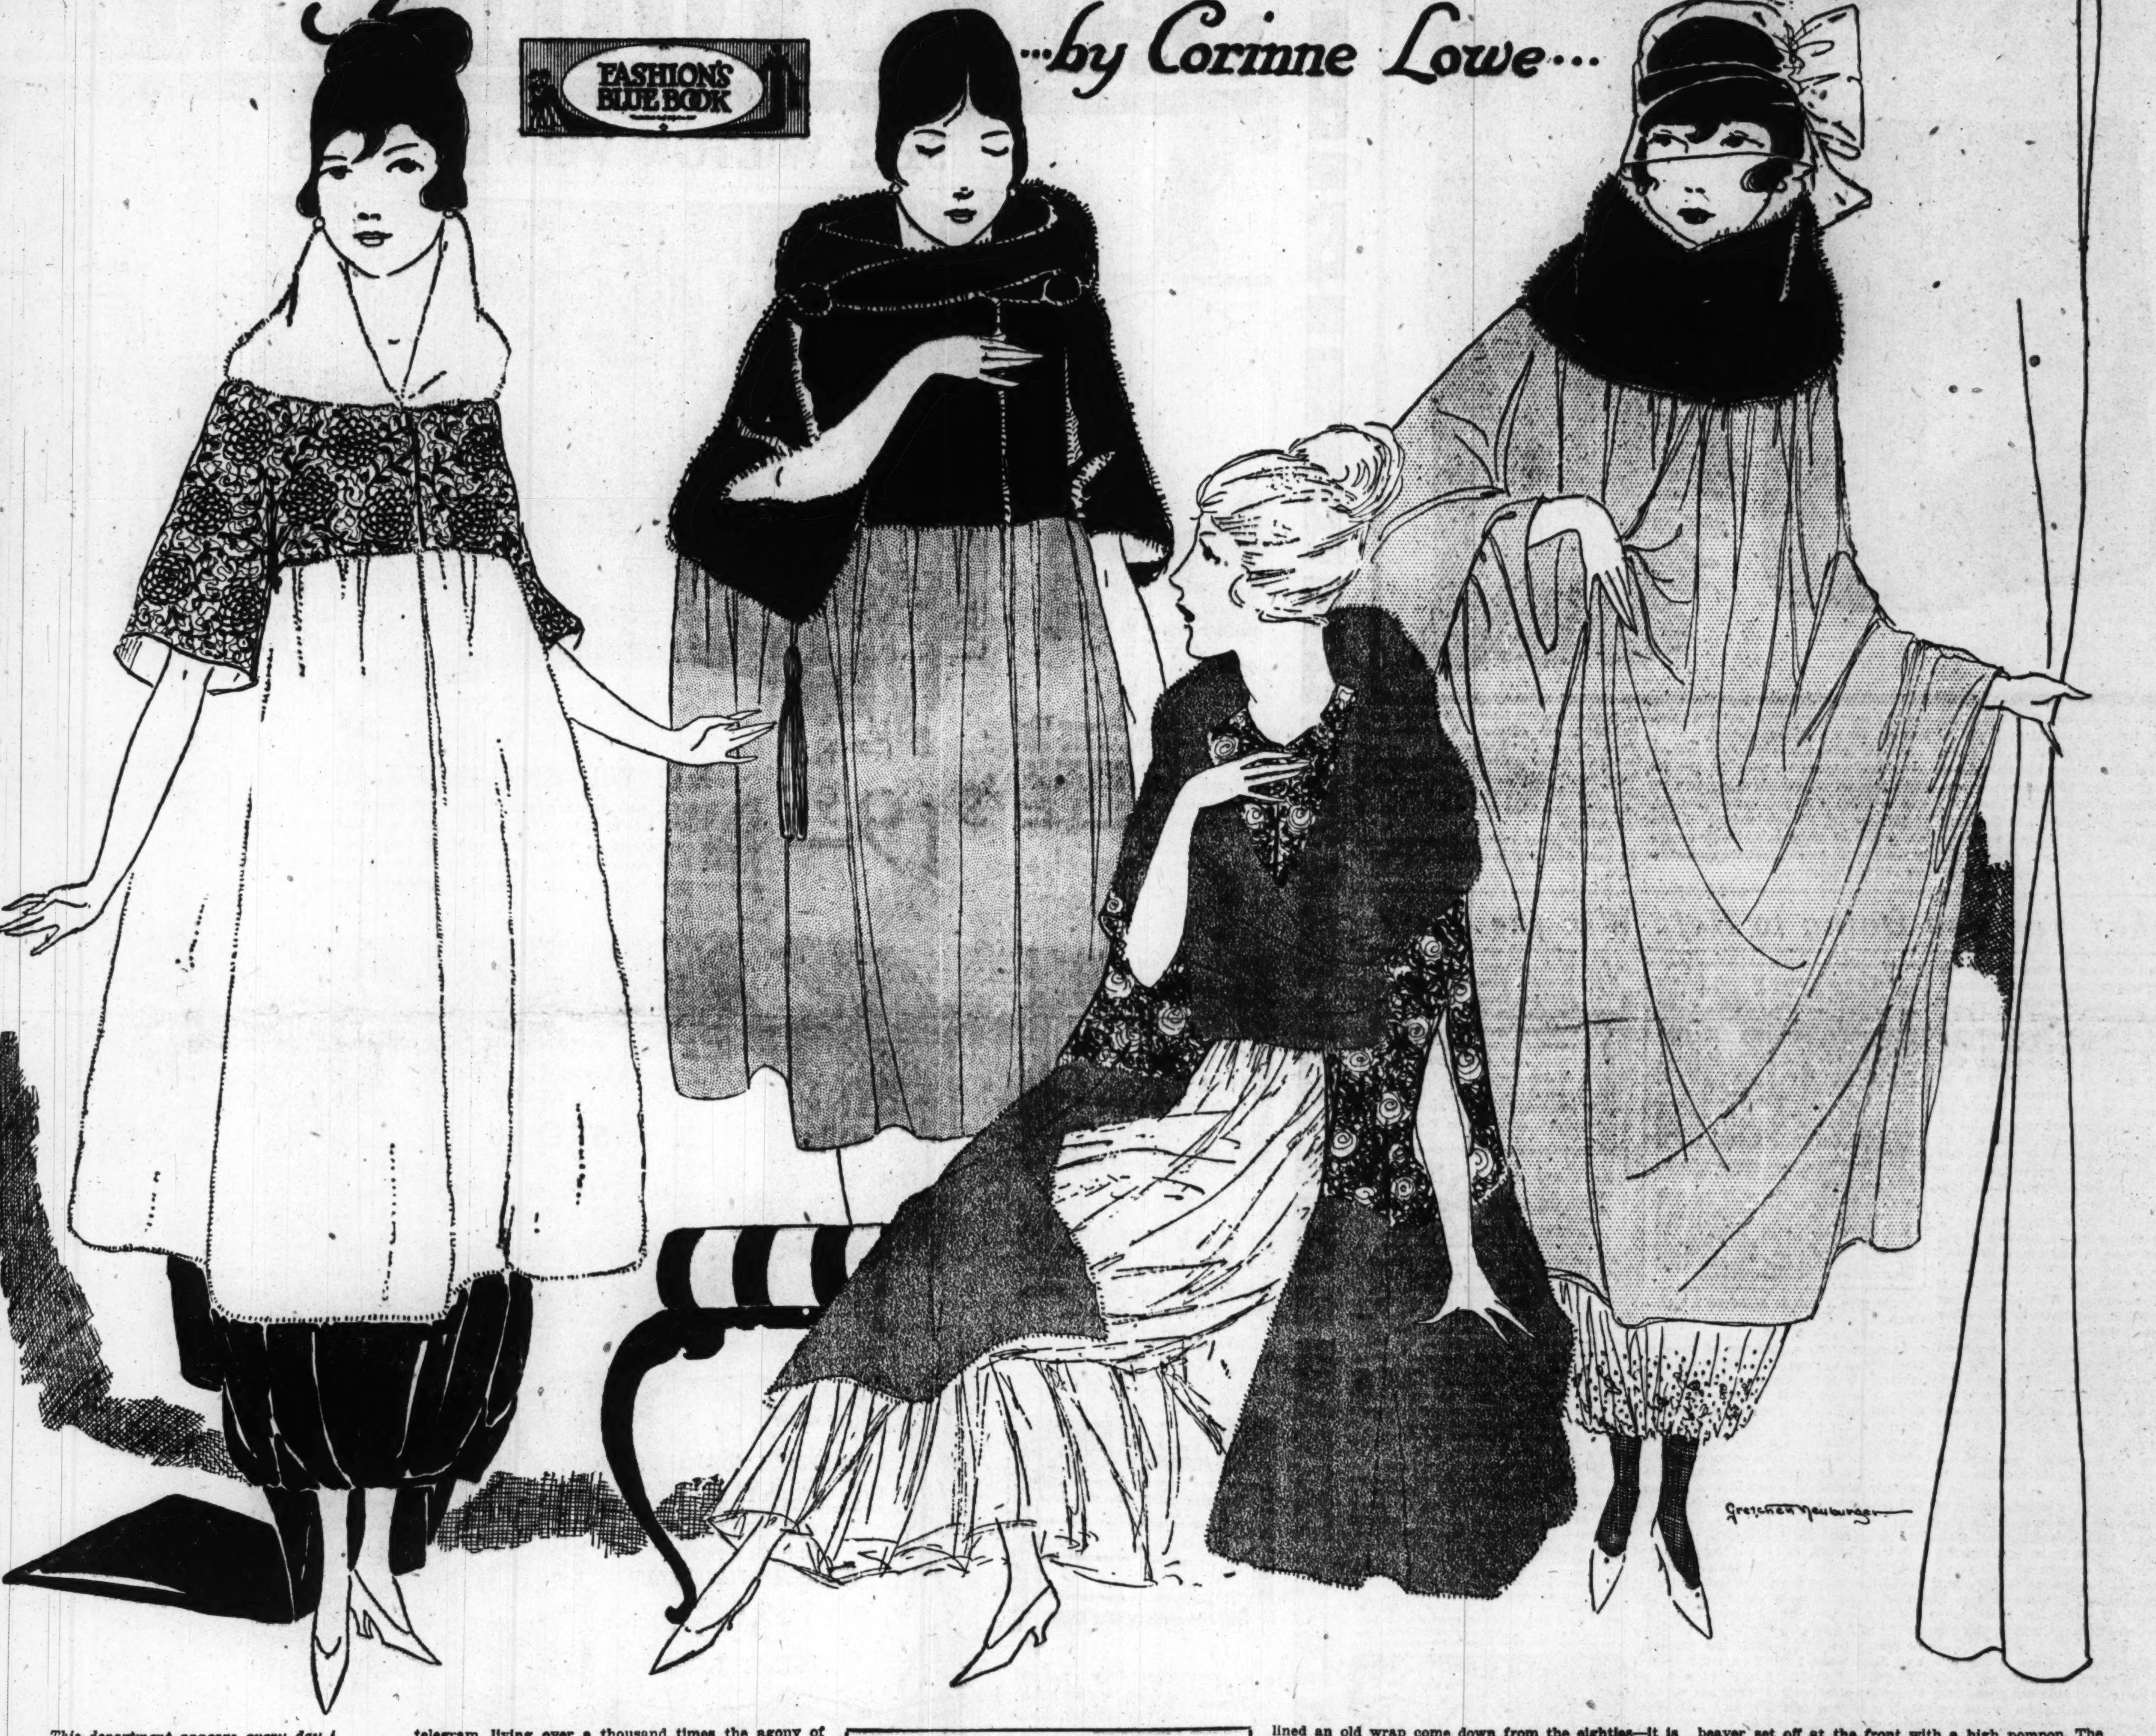
FASHIONS, BEAUTY, CONTESTS.

PART 6

This Year One Trims the Fur

…by Corinne Lowe…

FASHIONS BLUE BOOK



This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

NEW YORK. — [Special Correspondence.] — "My dear," said the Person from Our Own Small Town as she pressed a wistful little nose against the pane of a Fifth avenue shop, "I never in my life seen such beautiful clothes as there are this year. Doesn't it seem rather dreadful to you that now while we are at war——" She paused and gave an awed little touch to the bag of knitting on her arm as if by this contact she was going to fortify her own patriotism against the snares of an evil lavishness.

"Wicked?" I repeated.

"Yes," said the Person from Our Own Small Town, "it is horrible to me—like that plant—what do they call it—you know the one Keats wrote about—that grows from dead men's brains."

I looked in at the window, glittering like Ali Baba's cave with all its treasures. Here were brooches fit for a sultan's evening court, flash of satin, soft, sumptuous, purring bits of ermine and chinchilla, hats gay with plumes—everywhere flicker of tinsel, challenge of beauty. And then I looked back at the Small Person.

"Yes," said I, "it does seem like that when you think about it. But I can't help feeling that all these bits of beautiful color and fabric have their uses. It isn't an economic one. It is something deeper than that. It goes down to the roots of a woman's heart. Did you ever stop to consider," and for one moment I stopped, conscious that I was talking much like the instructive mamma whose precocious child is always asking about the cumulous clouds (you know that kind of mamma who stars in the informative volumes which are meant to draw children's minds from the frivolous pleasures of Henty and the Elsie Dinsmore books), "do you ever stop to consider that waiting is a hard job. It must be much easier to go off to war than to sit day by day watching for the postman, dreading the sound of the telegram, living over a thousand times the agony of reading some printed word of disaster. Clothes—beautiful clothes—have a certain value in cheering the woman who waits. They are like the band which plays while the soldier marches to battle. And in this light I can't think of them as wicked. I look on them as the fifes and drums which help to keep your courage up. Of course, every woman wants to give to her country first. But if she is rich enough to do both—why not the pretties, too—the pretties which give work to thousands who perhaps could not otherwise make a living?"

Whether we approve or not, however, is beside the question. The fact remains that clothes are, as our friend remarked, more sumptuous than they have been in years. To realize this we need only glance at some of the evening wraps displayed for this winter.

The group of such garments shown today begins with the magnificent wrap at the left. This is achieved of tailless ermine, snowy as only country snow can be. It is trimmed—note the charming topsy-turvydom of that—with wonderful gold and black and old blue brocade which forms the quaint little yoke and sleeves and which looks on the snowy background like a shower of gay, brilliant confetti.

The second model chats of fur, but has its reticences. Made of the fuschia colored chiffon velvet which is so much liked this season, it has a top of kolinsky in which you will note the crossing of the collar and the swishing silken tassels of fuchsia tinted silk.

Brocade and fur—there is certainly no more able bodied formula of beauty than this, and here we have again the combination at its most fluent state. The fur of this wrap is Hudson bay sable and the accessory is brocade in orange, black, and gold. The neck line of this brocade, fastening with one great self covered button, is notable and so is the way the collar ducks down surplice fashion and, passing through slits in the material, fastens at the back underneath the wrap.

JUST to show that we are not directly descended from the Lady of the Goatskins we interpose a touch of rich brocade in our ermine evening wrap to the left. The next model is fuchsia colored velvet with kolinsky collar buttoning quaintly as it crosses over. Even Hudson bay sable gets an added touch of majesty from the black, orange, and gold brocade which exclaims against the furry background of the adjacent model. The last wrap is a vermilion chiffon velvet lined with rose colored satin and with a mere collar of black lynx.

In the next wrap Jenny shows you how you may contrive to be elegant with only a mere syllable of fur. The pelt here is black lynx and is confined to the comparatively small collar above which, by the way, shows a dab of the lovely vermilion chiffon velvet which achieves the wrap. Linings are an important consideration in all of this year's wraps and suits and here there has been selected an exquisite shade of rose satin. Red and rose—the whole wrap is like a lovely glowing rose—Jacqueminot above, La France underneath.

Needless to say, none of these creations is for the woman who must consider whether she had better stop Mary's music lessons or stop the morning egg. But it is not at all necessary that the same rich materials indicated here must be used to complete a good looking copy. Corduroy and satin, odd bits of pelt and material which may be hidden away in the bureau drawers, imitation furs, the squirrel which may have lined an old wrap come down from the eighties—it is really wonderful how much like a sponge the evening wrap may be. It will take up all sorts of odds and ends. And the garments shown here indicate mere details of form which prevail in the fashionable evening cloaks rather than any hard and fast rules about material. All of them may be copied effectively in less expensive fabrics.

Meanwhile, night is bringing out other things than the cereus and the evening wrap. For the first time in years evening hats are having a vogue. It goes without saying that this hat is the natural companion of the dinner gowns which so many fashionable women are wearing in place of the haughty alabaster shoulder effect. Since most of these dinner gowns are of black velvet, black satin, black jet and lace, it goes without saying that the hats follow this line of suggestion and that evening shapes of black maline, Chantilly, or brocade are much in the millinery foreground. Fur and lace are a classic combination, and some of the most charming examples work out this theory.

For daytime wear small hats are still the thing. The reason for this is not far to seek. Cumbersome fur collars are the rage and to put with this a great floppy, wide brimmed hat—it is to laugh, madame. As one debutante remarked, it makes a woman look too much like a freight elevator. And so, as a result of the big fur collar, we have again and again and again the small, close fitting hat. Many of these hats are untrimmed. Why gild brocaded gold any more than refined gold? And the fact jumps out that a great many of these smart, close fitting shapes are of black satin brocaded heavily in gold or silver. Among these are all sorts of modifications of the Russian hat.

Military modes are also somewhat persistent. For instance, a woman seen this week wore with a handsome black georgette gown trimmed lavishly in gold thread embroidery a jaunty continental shape of black silk beaver set off at the front with a high pompon. The completing soldier touch came from a long cape of velours cloth lined with gold colored satin and buttoning with the most military buttons.

The Sammy hat has been exploited now for months, but along comes our most prominent New York milliner with still another play on this. This same house has given also an extra tam, this one inspired by the Alpine soldiers, and the tam guard continues generally to enroll new recruits every day.

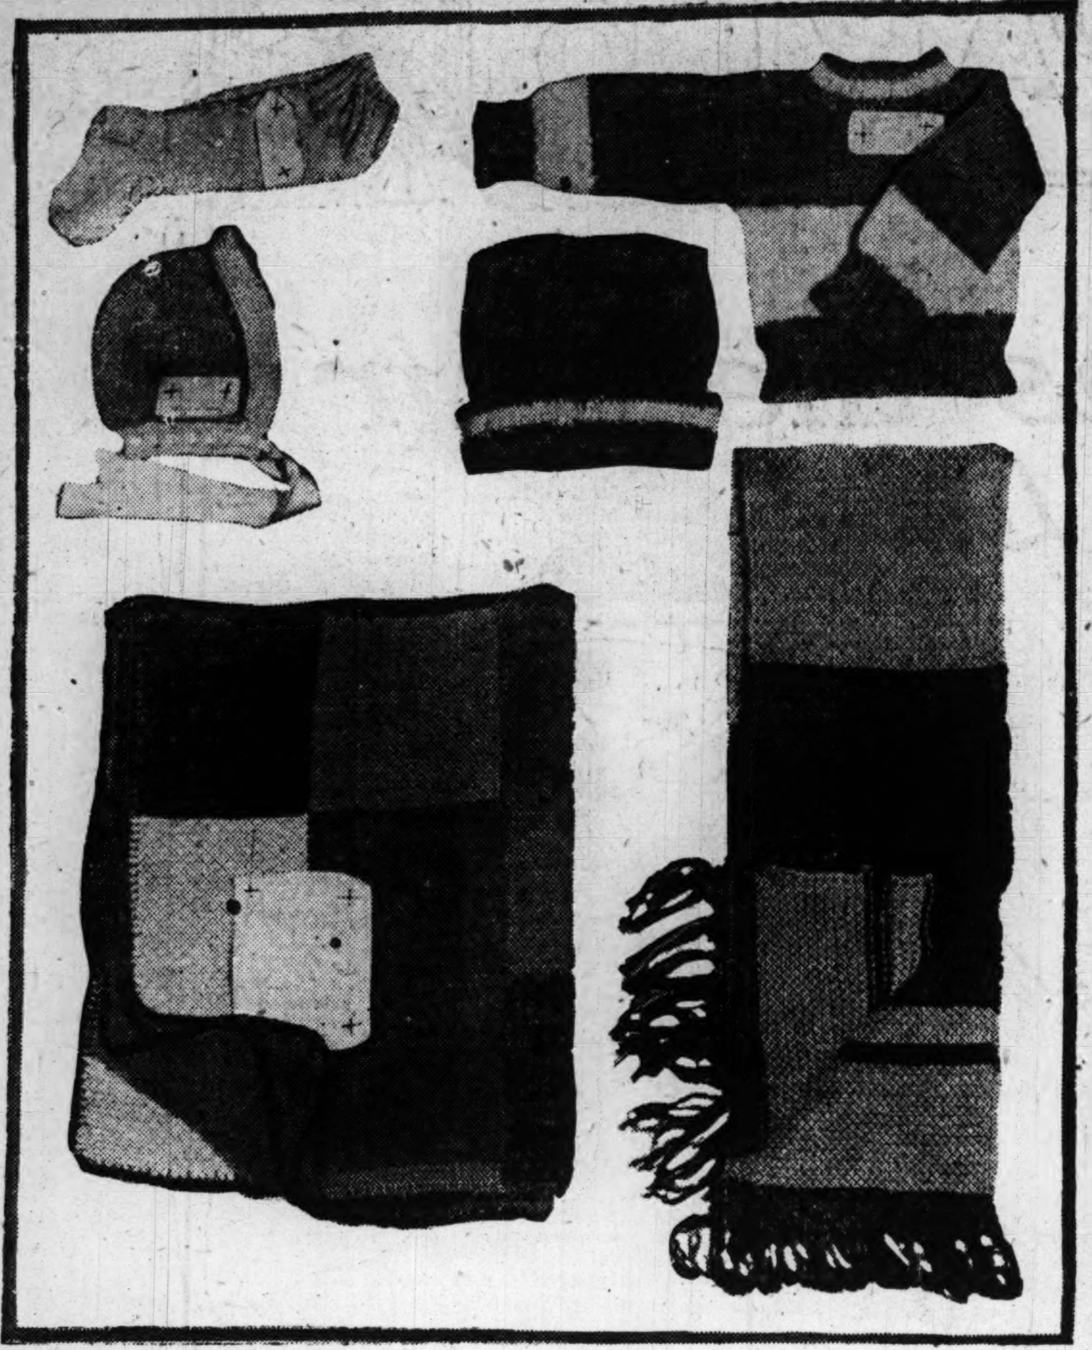
Apparently what every gown should know is—a tunic. We have witnessed this year a perfect tunic typhoon and the winds never cease blowing. Generally these accessories fall over an extremely tight underskirt, and often they are irregular in outline. But of course one can tell no more about tunic doin's than one can about one's best friends.

Perhaps the smartest model of an afternoon frock carrying out the tunic idea occurred in seal brown georgette crepe with a slimpsey drop skirt hobbled into a ten inch band of seal. The tunic of georgette was wide and full and embroidered at the hem with flat, dull gold beads in designs about a foot apart. A band of seal finished the square cut neck of the back and a girdle of georgette, finished with the gold beads, was knotted loosely about the waist and allowed to fall in long ends at the side.

With this stunning frock was worn a continental hat of brown velvet beaded in gold and putting off a rocket of brown paradise at the side. Brown silk hose and suede slippers were the finishing touch.

And, speaking of slippers, it is interesting to see the foot fantasies of the present season. The button hook may now come down from the wall. There's work ahead for poor old hook, for the laced boot of afternoon service has gone out in favor of the buttoned shoe. Along with this high boot we still see slippers, strapped and buttoned, worn with hose to match the gown.

Made by School Children for the Refugee Babies.



Here are specimens of the various ways that one may utilize all bits of yarn, any color. Search your scrap boxes and no doubt you will find pieces of wool that can be converted into some of these warm, knitted garments for the babies in France and Belgium.

These garments have been made by American school children, who belong to a group known as a "junior auxiliary," a new department of Red Cross service, for the French babies.

If you have some brightly colored yarn that cannot be used for the soldiers instead of making a garment for yourself, use it to help keep the infant population of France warm. Utilize all scraps of yarn in knitting or crocheting caps, hoods, jackets or booties for refugee children.

A child's scarf may be made by casting on thirty stitches—knit one yard long. Baby afghans may be all one color or clean leftovers of various colored wool yarns. Make into squares 5x5 inches, then sew or crochet 14 squares together for length and 10 for width.

Any of these knitted garments may be sent to the Red Cross for distribution.

What Are You Doing to Help Win the War?

Your Share and My Share.

Two women were seated behind me in the bus coming downtown the other morning. One was plying her needles as fast as she could on a half finished sock. The other was on her way downtown to buy more wool. I gleaned from her conversation, together with the fact that she had registered quite a lot of time for partriotic service besides. But with an inconsistency of the brand which humorists have appended to our sex since time immemorial, their conversation ran like this:

"It certainly looks funny to me. I don't see the sense of putting a tax on theater tickets and opera tickets," said one, "and on everything else."

"And I don't, either. Some one is getting that money. There's a nigger in the wood pile somewhere," the other gabbily assented.

And, having struck a common ground of brainless thinking, they expatiated windily and loudly, one knitting as fast as she could, the other hurrying as fast as she could to buy more wool for a sweater for her nephew at a camp.

If there were within earshot an enemy alien, that would be music to his ears, I thought.

The strength of the woman power of America depends upon more than just busy fingers. It depends upon discipline of mind with heart and fingers. I say heart and fingers advisedly, because I believe the hearts of my countrywomen on the bus were as true to their country's cause as their busy fingers. Undisciplined minds was the fault.

None of us women are doing our share in the nation's task until we realize that individually we contribute to the morale of the nation by our patriotic expression, by our faith in our government, even though the humanness of error may creep into its business occasionally, and by the highest form of idealism toward our country. In other words, it profiteth us nothing if we knit and make bandages fast and furiously and at the same time contribute joy to the enemy and threaten the morale of our nation by mutinous expressions.

Her Share.

If through no fault of your own or some fault of your own you failed to sign up for war service in the recent big nation-wide drive, don't be discouraged and feel your one and only chance escaped you. The Woman's Council of Defense, 120 West Adams street, and the Red Cross, 62 East Washington street, will have booths for registration indefinitely.

In case you find yourself still standing "'twixt excuses and duty," consider this little story told me by the woman registrar who was on duty in an Italian section.

There was in this particular neighborhood considerable misunderstanding among the foreign born element as to the actual nature of the registration, some of them thinking it compulsory, others thinking it an employment bureau with immediate work to offer.

There came in one young woman of Italian birth, mother of three children. She was tubercular. She has a husband, but she helped out the family exchequer with an afternoon job cleaning in an office building. She wanted to work mornings. The registrar thought she was registering for pay service or maybe was among those who thought registration compulsory. She asked her a second time if her services were voluntary.

The woman answered: "Yes, I give from 9 to 12 mornings after I get my work done. My brother he fights and my uncle he fights in Italy, and I should give a couple of hours a day, I think!"

What are you doing to help win the war? If you are one of the thousands of women who have responded to the call to the colors, is the rifle you shoulder loaded with practical ideas on how to save wheat, meat, milk, fats, sugar, and fuel, and are you handling it as the soldier handles his, with the idea of winning the war? Have you practical ideas on dress conservation, on health conservation, and the health of those under your direction? Perhaps you have faced the problem of earning a living while your soldier man is away. Have you any touching, appealing anecdote of him you would like to share with other mothers and sisters and wives of other men in khaki?

This department is an exchange for the women who are helping to win the war. Will you enlist?

"The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published on what you are doing to help win the war. If other things occur to you than those suggested send them in. Remember the suggestion you make may be a big "bit." Write on one side of the paper only. No manuscripts can be returned. Address Antoinette Donnelly, "Chicago Tribune."

In answer to a number of queries concerning clerical work for women in connection with the war department, let me advise that women desiring clerical work in government service should write to the civil service commission, Washington, D. C., as such work comes under civil service regulations. The demand for clerical workers and stenographers in Washington is heavy, but experts are wanted.

For Sick Soldiers.

I have saved up all the small glass jars that we buy so many things packed in these days and have collected all I could from my friends. All summer at any time I had a little extra fruit I made up a few jars of jelly or jam. So with almost no expense and little work I have on hand about 300 jars of fruit. I am going to a camp hospital once a week all winter with a basket of these jars and give each sick soldier a jar and offer to write a letter for him. Each jar contains enough for one or two good meals and will be something different.

Why the Huns Can't Win.

In my own small way I am trying to help. I am 40 years old, a widow, and employed from 9 a. m. to 5:30 p. m. at $15 per week. Have "adopted" a navy boy whose name was kindly furnished me by Mrs. Moffett, wife of Commandant Moffett at Great Lakes. I write him cheery letters often, and occasionally I write to his widowed mother to cheer her.

I write letters several times a week to five acquaintances who are either serving in France or are at cantonments, and send them the sporting sections from the newspapers each day. I have sent one Christmas box to France, have bought a $50 Liberty bond, payable $1 weekly, and have knitted one scarf and one sweater, buying the yarn with dimes I saved.

Most Old People Are Constipated

The wear of years impairs the action of the bowels. As people grow older they restrict their activity, neglect to take sufficient exercise, and indulge a natural disposition to take things easy. The digestive organs become more sensitive to the demands made upon them and rebel more quickly.

It is of special importance to the health of elderly people that the bowels be kept normally active. A mild, yet effective, remedy for constipation, and one that is especially suited to the needs of old folks, women and children, is the combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin sold in drug stores under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It costs only fifty cents a bottle, and should be in every family medicine chest. A trial bottle, free of charge, can be obtained by writing to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 456 Washington St., Monticello, Illinois, for whom this advertisement is published.

La-May Face Powder Stays on Better Than Any Other

A specialist has at last perfected a pure face powder that really stays on; that stays on until you wash it off. It does not contain white lead or starchy rice powder to make it stick. This improved formula contains a medical powder doctors use to heal the skin. White lead poisons the skin and rice powder turns into a gluey paste that encourages enlarged pores, blackheads and rice powder pimples. In fact this new powder helps to prevent and reduce enlarged pores, blackheads and pimples. It is also astringent, discouraging flabbiness, crow's feet and wrinkles. To get this unusual powder, learn to pronounce the name correctly. It is called La-may [French, Poudre L'Amé]. Because it is pure and because it stays on better than any other, it is already sold by thousands of dealers everywhere. There are two sizes. The large size is only fifty cents and the half size is twenty-five cents. When you use this delightful La-may and you see how wonderfully it beautifies your complexion, you will understand why it so quickly became the most popular complexion powder sold in New York.—Advertisement.

MOVIE ACTRESSES AND THEIR HAIR

Did it ever occur to you that every movie actress you have seen has lovely hair, while the most popular count their curls as their chief beauty? In fact, many are leading ladies just because of their attractive locks. Inquiry among them discloses the fact that they bring out all the natural beauty of their hair by careful shampooing, not with any soap or makeshift, but with a simple mixture by putting a teaspoonful of Canthrox (which they get from the druggist) in a cup of hot water and applying this instead of soap. This full cup of shampoo liquid is enough so it is easy to apply it to all the hair instead of just the top of the head. After its use, the hair dries rapidly with uniform color. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. The hair is so fluffy that it looks much heavier than it is, while its lustre and softness is delightful.—Advertisement.

REAL LOVE STORIES

AN OLD MAID'S COURTSHIP.

THERE was an old maid in our office. One might have thought she had passed the age when there was any hope of her getting married, but evidently Miss Pelley had not given up hope. She exercised many little artifices to attract the men, but [illegible] succeeded only in annoying them.

As the business grew Miss Pelley was unable to attend to all of the accounts, so a new bookkeeper was hired to help out at that end, combining his duties with those of cashier. George Brooks, the new man, was anything but prepossessing, being awkward, ill kempt and shifty eyed. In spite of physical defects, however, he was neat and accurate at figures and always on the job. He looked good to Miss Pelley. It soon got around that he was a confirmed bachelor and it was evident that she had set her cap for him.

Of course, being a woman, she was at a disadvantage. He met her advances not unkindly, but never more than a fourth of the way. So far as their fellow workers knew he never invited her to a picture show or other entertainment or spent any money for candy or flowers for her. This was not because he was stingy, for he was generally free with his money.

Frequently as he stepped out into the street she caught up with him and they walked a few blocks together until their ways parted, Miss Pelley doing most of the talking, and acting coy and simpering. That is as far as the courtship, or rather the acquaintanceship, went in the course of six or seven months.

Then Brooks fell ill. Miss Pelley, seeing an opportunity to do him a favor, announced that she would do his work. And she did, coming down no one knows how early in the morning and staying no one knows how late at night. When Brooks returned after ten days her face was drawn, her complexion gray, her homeliness verging on ugliness. She earned a smile from Brooks, a curt word or two of gratitude. That was all. But she was repaid.

Shortly afterward the firm's books were audited. The auditor, a keen, ferretlike person, had a session with the boss in the latter's private office. Miss Pelley, scenting something amiss, found an excuse for going in there in order to catch a word or two of what was going on, but she came out again immediately. Since the auditor's arrival she had watched him with the intentness of a cat; now she seemed worried and flustered.

The boss called for Brooks. The bookkeeper had been hanging over his ledger, looking about furtively, and aimlessly dipping his pen into the ink well, but when the summons came he stepped away nonchalantly enough. Miss Pelley sat outside the boss' door, a world of yearning, pity and apprehension in her face while she rolled her handkerchief into a little tight ball.

In a quarter of an hour Brooks returned to the outer office. He was limp, haggard, all in. He went to his desk, dropped into his chair, and let his head fall down on his arms. Miss Pelley passed by him, touched his arm lightly with the tips of her fingers, and marched into the boss' office.

"How much are the accounts short?" she aked.

The boss answered, "Nine hundred dollars."

"If you will let him go," she said, "I will make up the shortage. I have savings amounting to nearly that much, and there are some trinkets which I can sell to make up the difference." She explained that she had discovered that the accounts were wrong during Brooks' illness and had been praying for an opportunity to make good the loss before it was found out. The unexpected coming of the auditor had spoiled her plans.

At first the men would not listen to her; but she argued, pleaded, wept, went down on her knees, and finally they gave in. She went out and told Brooks what she had done as simply as if she had been explaining a detail in the accounts. He listened without any show of emotion other than a straightening of his fingers and a new light in his eyes. Then he took his coat and hat and walked out of the office never to return.

Miss Pelley stayed on. She had lost all of her coyness and sprightliness in the presence of men. Every week she received a letter postmarked from a small town in northern Minnesota, and these missives she handled tenderly. Three months after the auditor's visit Miss Pelley resigned, and not long afterwards a weekly paper in the town of the postmark brought back word of her marriage to George Brooks, a "logging contractor."

They have stuck together through thick and thin, slaved, saved, invested, and now have a good sized bank account, a son who is their pride and joy, and a position of respect in their community. The marriage has been an unusually happy one. R. D.

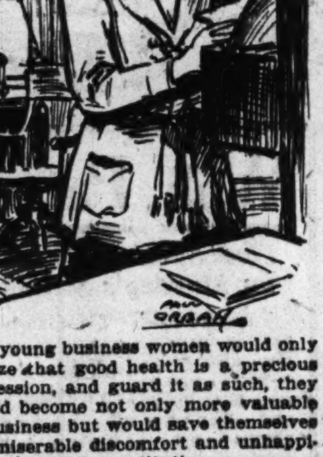
GUARD YOUR HEALTH.

IN the days of unsettled weather, when we wake up to we know not what sort of a day, it is necessary for the girl who is up early every morning and off to business, regardless of the weather, to use extraordinary caution in guarding her health.



If young business women would only realize that good health is a precious possession, and guard it as such, they would become not only more valuable in business but would save themselves the miserable discomfort and unhappiness of a frail constitution.

Of course, there are extremists to be found in every sphere, so we have with us the girl who will worry herself into a fine state of "nerves" trying to keep well. We have not to do with her now, however. This appeal is to the girl who thoughtlessly fails to preserve and improve her physical well being.

Women do not always dress with a view to their health's sake. This is one reason why women are delicate and not as dependable as men in business.

The other day I had an engagement for luncheon with a friend who works in a downtown office. As we had not settled on an eating place, she asked me to call for her at the office. While I waited for her to put on her hat and coat I looked around the office and noticed that there were four desks closed and unoccupied. I knew there were about ten girls employed in the office, and was surprised to see so few of them about. On the way out I asked my companion where all the girls were. She told me that four were away that day on account of illness, and that one or two were absent nearly every day. According to her, it is a rare day that finds all the girls at their desks.

It is imperative that every girl who works and expects to keep on working must give her whole attention to keeping herself well. She must live hygienically, keep her body and her clothes always clean, eat wholesome food and enough of it, drink plenty of water, exercise continually, and wear sufficient clothing to protect herself from inclement weather.

Too much stress cannot be laid on the fact that a woman must dress properly in order to retain her health. She ought to dress according to the weather. It stands to reason that she needs more protection by heavy clothing on cold, damp days than she does when it is fair and warm. Some women's idea of dressing is to wear a costume that displays this or that charm to advantage, and never regards its suitability to the season, the day, or the place. A woman is never really becomingly dressed if her clothes are not in accordance with the condition of the weather.

A manager of a large office building told me that he uses a great deal more fuel in the heating of the building than is really necessary. He has had many complaints from the women who work in the offices in the building that the rooms were not sufficiently heated, so he has had to keep the building overheated at all times. From his observation he discovered that nearly all the complaints came from girls who were in the habit of wearing chiffon and georgette crêpe waists, with their arms, backs, and chests unduly exposed to the elements.

Girls who wear in the fall and winter clothes that are suitable only for midsummer not only expose themselves to many ills but put a hardship on the people about them by depriving their office mates of fresh air because they cannot bear to have the windows opened.

Housework Worked Off Ten Pounds In One Month says Antoinette Donnelly

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

HEREWITH is an honest to goodness testimonial of the powers of housework as a beautifier. I'd like to be able to print the photograph of the woman in the case, because she's such a ripping looking person—especially since she lost her ten pounds and has put a smarter activity into her every movement. But she bound me to secrecy as to real name, real address, and no photograph. But the honesty of her experience I can vouch for!

So, if you are interested in losing a few pounds or more than a few odd pounds—my advice to you is to listen to what Mrs. J. (phoney initials I give, according to my contract with the loser of the pounds) has to say in favor of housework as a reducer.

"I had a pretty soft life of it," said Mrs. J., "until a couple of months ago. I wasn't so rich, but my husband wouldn't let me do any housework. Some husbands have an idea that they are going to run the barometer of their earning capacity down too low in the sight of their fellow men to permit their wives to do housework. That was the way with mine. I really wanted to do more of it. But he'd say, 'O, dear, what do you want to do anything for when I'm paying a maid $8 a week?' And he'd get mad if he caught me at any of the rough work around the house.

"I was just lazy enough to fall easily into the soft berth he made for me, with the result that I began to look the part. When we were married I weighed 128. Two years of nothing to do but eat, dress, go to bridge parties, and eat some more, and I jumped to 145, including a fat waist, fat hips, a fat chin! And I may add a few cutting remarks from the indulgent husband!

"Then there came a day when my husband joined the colors, leaving me with enough to live on modestly. Modestly meant without a maid! For which I send up prayers of gratitude because I've learned a lot of the usefulness of life besides the loss of pounds.

"He felt pretty badly leaving me to face things alone and in a frugal way, the dear boy! When I'd gladly go out to earn a living rather than stand between him and his duty to his country.

"I let the maid go, of course. And I started in where she left off. Instead of lying in bed until 9 and 10 in the morning I got up and got breakfast. I made the beds and I swept and I dusted. I got a pair of rubber gloves and I scrubbed the kitchen floor and I washed up the oiled floors throughout the rest of the house.

"I imagine the blood of my great grandmother began to assert itself. She was the kind of woman you read about in early settlement life. Bereaved early, she raised a family on a farm and did not only the housework but the farmwork, to splitting and cutting down trees. I began to feel like a new woman before I had been doing my work a week. And I found so much to keep me moving it seemed I didn't get time to sit at all.

"At the end of the second week I began to have a somewhat emancipated feeling around my waist line which only a woman widowed of pounds knows the joy of! And then I was saving money. The Tuesdays when I used to have to hand over $8 didn't come around as fast when there was no maid to pay as they did when she was there. But the money was saved.

"Honestly, I don't see why women get the notion they are treated like dumb beasts because they are called upon to do their own work. It is an absolute joy to me—even to scrubbing the floors. It's fun. Honestly! Maybe it wouldn't be so funny, however, if I didn't feel I was doing double duty—removing dirt from the floor and pounds from myself. A woman who never smiled a smile in her life could grin a soul grin when the scale registers a decrease.

"I learned a little trick of picking things off the floor that helped make my limbs agile and my waist line limber. I used to make myself do it without bending my knees. I'll admit at first I cheated. But I got after a bit to do it easily.

"You can see how easy it is to get exercise when you are making a bed. The window of the bedroom I always kept wide open, so I tucked fresh air into my lungs as I tucked the sheets and the blankets in. The stretchings pulled off some of the fat that my back began to look bulgy with.

"A doctor told me one time that when you get down on your knees and scrub you take one of the most scientific positions for raising the internal organs and for shoulder, arm, and waist reduction you can't beat the scrubbing brush as a first aid.

"I will confess I never fell hard for the wash tub. That I didn't like because I never could wash without slopping myself all over and the floor for yards around.

"But I ironed. And the standing and moving around—over to the clothes horse and back again, to the stove and back again—well, they kept the flesh going at least!

"I washed the windows inside and out—and maybe you think I couldn't feel the muscles getting what was best for them.

"I got the active habit so that I even took to outdoor housework and discharged the man to whom we used to pay 25 cents an hour for raking up the leaves and mowing the grass. Ten minutes of this work and I would be in a perspiration. This, followed by a bath, always made me feel lighter in body—and soul, I might add.

"The bath taking was, perhaps, an important feature of my easy reducing. After any strenuous work like scrubbing I always took a tumble into the tub. It took the soreness out of me at first. And it made me feel so good."

"Yes, I give my heartiest indorsement to housework as an aid to reducing. After I was at it one month I tipped the scale exactly ten pounds less. Am I going to continue it? Well, you'll see me next minus ten more! You can count on that!"

> If you missed the Antoinette Donnelly series telling how she reduced Mrs. Eva Lane thirty-six pounds in six weeks, or how she added twenty pounds in five weeks to Miss Helen Barnett's weight, or how she corrected a head of dry, thin, falling hair and an oily scalp with dandruff, or the article on treating Miss Hill's complexion for pimples and blackheads, send a stamped, addressed envelope and the information will be mailed to you. Any other questions pertaining to beauty and hygiene will be gladly answered.

MRS. R. T. D.: THE ELECTRIC needle is really the only permanent means of removing superfluous hair. All other remedies are but temporary and once begun must be continued indefinitely. When the hair is on the face the electric needle is the only means that I can safely recommend to you. The charges and amount of work that can be done in an hour vary with the operator. The treatment is not especially painful. A good depilatory may be used on the arms or other parts of the body where it is desirable that superfluous hair be removed. The following is one of the best formulas for this purpose: Sulphide of barium, two drams; oxide of zinc and starch, each three drams. Mix well and keep tightly corked. When you wish to use this, mix with enough water to make a paste. The paste is then spread on the part and allowed to remain on for a few minutes. Then wash it off and apply cold cream. There will be a resulting irritation.

Collecting Butterflies.

"I am a little boy 11 years old and I am trying to get some butterflies for a collection. I have some monarchs and some black swallowtails, and I should be glad if some of your kind readers could send me some other kinds. I will pay the postage on them. "M. G."

The love of making collections of one sort or another is bound up in the heart of most small boys and girls. It is fortunate when the taste shows itself in something like butterfly collection, since this leads to study and a knowledge of nature and of entomology. All of us who recollect our own childhood are likely to be interested in a plea like this and we trust it may come to the notice of a reader who will be able to grant the little boy's wish. We shall be happy to send his address to some fellow collector, old or young, on the receipt of the clipping and of a stamped, addressed envelope for reply.

Ready to Offer Cheer.

"If you know of any fellows from 17 to 19 who need cheering up a bit, just send me their addresses and I will do my best. L. B. J."

I don't just at present know of any such fellows, but I dare say that some exist and hope they may see this cordial offer and write for the address of the lad who makes it. If they fail to do so it will be well for him to keep on the lookout for the letters of those who seem to him to call for his good offices in the cheering up line—provided they are men. We do not bring

Date Cake.

"Have you a recipe for date cake? My boys prefer it to more expensive fruit cake, and I am told it is more wholesome. I have eaten it, but the cook who used to make it for me has gone away and she did not leave the recipe. M. J. U."

One cup or half pound of dates and one cup of walnut meats, chopped fine with the dates. Beat three eggs lightly with one cup of granulated sugar, and half cup of flour sifted twice with one teaspoon of baking powder. Bake from three-quarters to one hour in an oven that has been heated ten minutes before the cake has been put into the oven. Bake slowly. Do not touch the cake until it is cold. Be sure to grease the pan well.

Pineapple Salad.

"Will you tell us how to make pineapple salad? We like the flavor of this fruit and are exceedingly fond of all manner of salads, including Macedoine, that are based upon fruits. M. F. R."

A slice of pineapple on a crisp bed of lettuce leaves. Fill the center with a ball of cream cheese covered with finely chopped nuts. In the heart of the lettuce beside the pineapple put boiled dressing and sprinkle with a dash of cayenne. The Macedoine salad best known to us has no fruit in it.

Cheer for an Invalid.

"Thank you so much for sending me the address of the boy for whom I asked. May I ask another favor? I would like to have the address of the mother who signed herself M. N. She requested some cheering up for the 16 year old son who is an invalid. If there is anything I can do to lighten the mother's burden or to make the son just a bit happier I shall be grateful for the opportunity to do this. "R. G. A."

It gives pleasure to send the second address asked and no doubt both the mother and the invalid boy will be helped by her cheery ministrations.

Girls! Use Lemon Juice!

Make a quarter pint of beauty cream for little cost.
Clears, softens and whitens the skin.
Brings out the hidden roses!

By all means, girls, prepare a lemon lotion to keep your skin flexible and young looking. You will soon realize that true loveliness does not mean the powdery look or waxen colorlessness of some hot-house flower, but is typified by the velvety softness of your skin, your peach-like complexion and rosy-white hands.

At the cost of a small jar of ordinary cold cream one can prepare a full quarter pint of the most wonderful lemon skin softener and complexion beautifier, by squeezing the juice of two fresh lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White. Care should be taken to strain the juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan, and is the ideal skin softener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of Orchard White at any pharmacy or toilet counter and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms, and particularly rough, red hands. You'll like it immensely.

Genuine Orchard White bears the name, Edward Wesley Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Why does a painter dip his cut hand in turpentine?

Simply because he knows that Turpentine goes into every nook and corner of the wound, sterilizes it, leaving it wholesome, clean and in the right condition for rapid healing. Grandmother used Turpentine to allay infection, to relieve colds, headaches, pains and many other troubles. It burnt and it smelled but it was an unusually effective remedy just the same.

is the modern form of Turpentine. It will do just the same things only better, because it also contains Menthol and Camphor, two other old-time remedies. Turpo hasn't a bite, nor a sting. It is a pure, golden, delightful-smelling salve that is perfectly safe to use and that stands in a class by itself among household remedies. It is the only Turpentine Ointment.

You can get Turpo from your druggist for 25c, 50c and $1 a jar. If he can't supply you, send us his name and address and we'll send you a sample free.

Turpo is a fine remedy for: cuts, scratches, burns, sores, wounds, rough or chapped skin, lameness, sore joints, sunburn, insect bites, ivy poisoning, piles, pimples, etc.

Turpo is a ready relief for all kinds of colds, Catarrh, Hay Fever, Spasmodic Croup, Whooping Cough, headaches, earaches, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Pleurisy, etc.

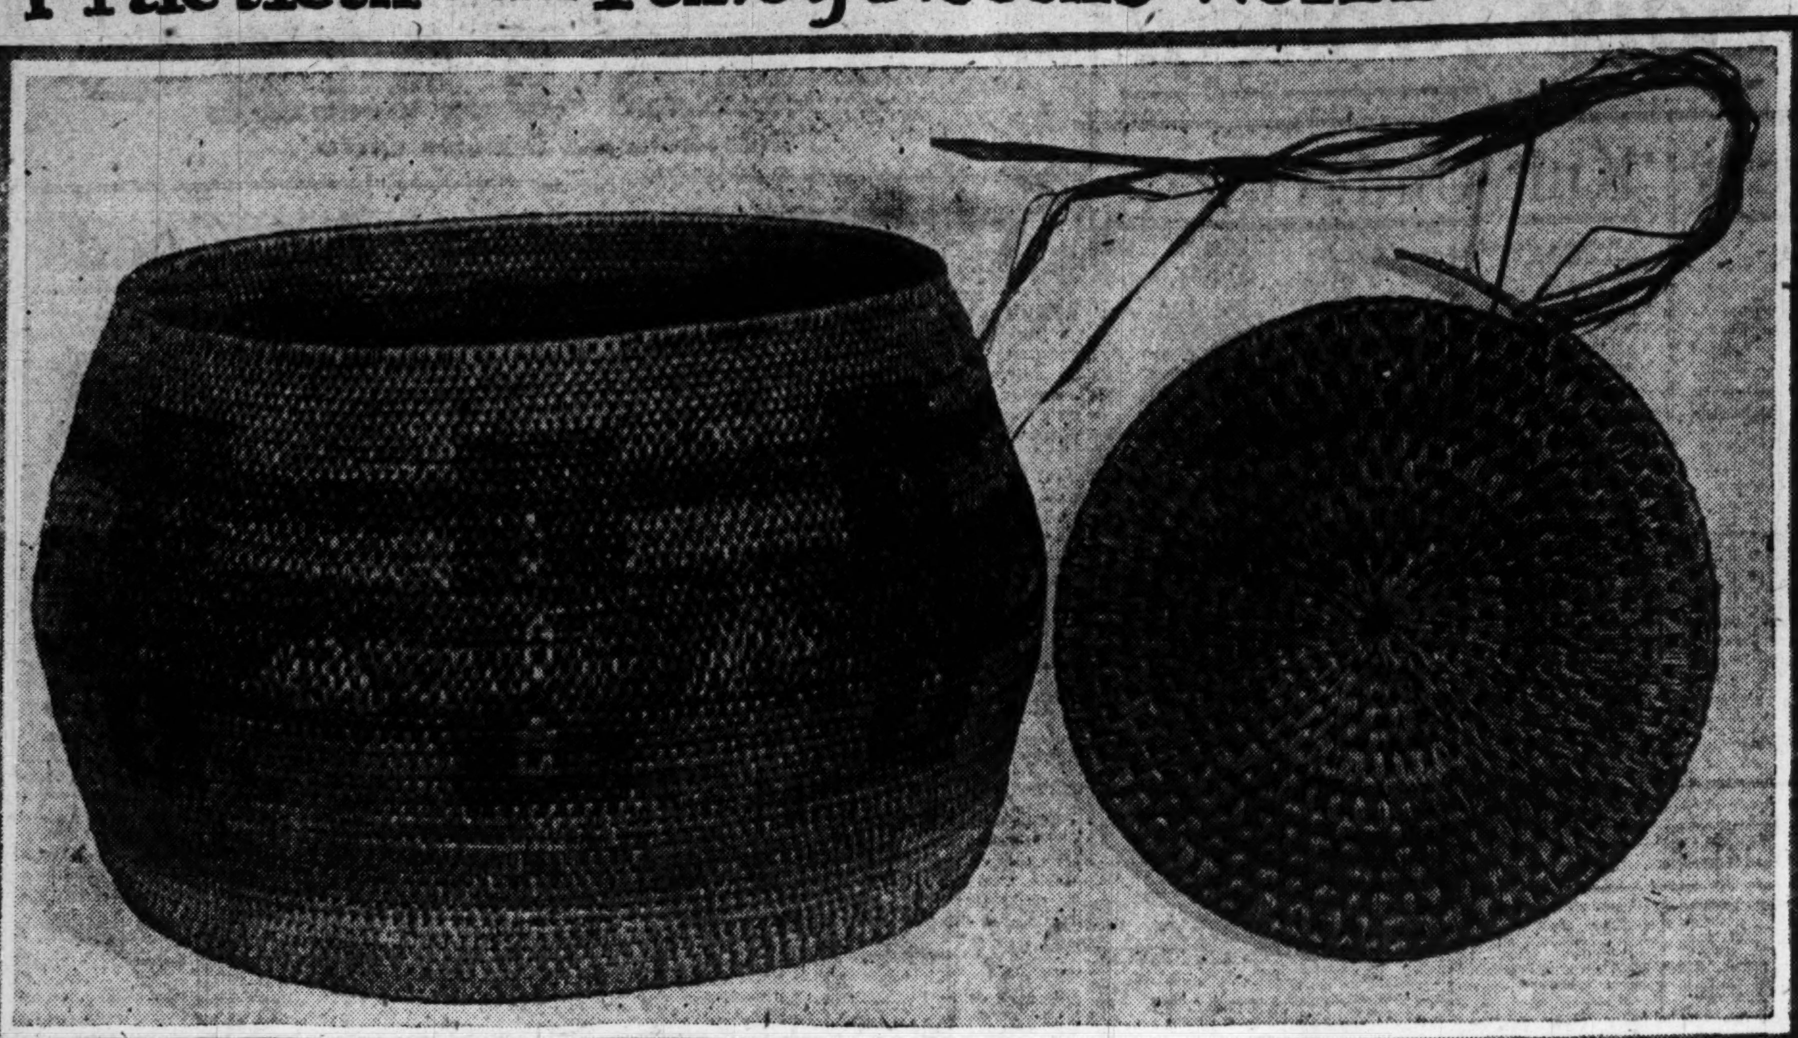
Practical and Fancy Needle-Work

CLOTILDE



THIS sewing or knitting basket made of reed wrapped and stitched together with raffia makes an attractive Christmas gift. Directions for making are as follows:

When the reed has been soaked until pliable, with a sharp knife shave one end to a point. Wrap this point for an inch or so with raffia and bend around in a circle. Wrap again and take a stitch into the first row, and so on around, wrapping several times (away from the person) and then taking a stitch.

In all stitch work the reed should be damp enough to be pliable, but not wet enough to make the raffia wet, for in the latter case the work will be rather loose when it gets dry. Be careful to make the stitches run the way the raffia is wrapped, so they will not be too plainly seen.

When a strand of raffia is almost used, slip another strand across the reed and work over it. (This fastens the new strand). Then lay across the reed the remainder of first strand, pick up the new strand and work over raffia and reed till fastened. Then continue on as before. When the base of the basket is as large as desired begin the sides by coiling a row directly on the last row of the base and stitch the same as in the bottom, shaping the sides to suit ones taste, holding the reed gradually in or out as the case may be. Finish at the same point of the basket where you started to turn up for the sides, shape part of the reed to a point and stitch down to the last row.

When it becomes necessary to use a new piece of reed, shave off the upper side of the old piece and the under side of the new piece about an inch from the end, place together and wrap a couple of times with raffia to hold before it is stitched. When a second color is needed, lay an end of it along the reed under the raffia with which the stitching is being done for an inch or so before desiring to use it.

This basket is made of natural color raffia, the pattern being a dark brown band design. The distance around the basket is divided into four parts, each fourth part of the design being alike, so by studying one-fourth of the design here photographed one can readily copy it.

My Most Embarrassing Moment.

"The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published on the subject "The Most Embarrassing Moment of My Life Was When——." Address Embarrassing Moments Editor, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Write on only one side of the paper. No manuscripts will be returned.

The Crowd Went Wild.

It was at one of the summer parks, where I had gone to meet my wife and baby, who had gone ahead of me. While passing a group of young fellows trying their strength on a striking machine I decided to show them how to ring the bell. Taking one of the large wooden sledges, I made a vicious swing, but I never can remember if the bell rang or not, for out of my inside coat pocket there fell with a crash on the sidewalk our baby's nursing bottle, full of milk. The crowd went wild, and the best thing I could do was to get out of sight. F. M.

Resting Their Feet.

I was attending a reception and dance at a fashionable country club and was wearing white satin slippers that were a pretty close fit. While at the banquet table I slipped off the one that was the most uncomfortable to rest my poor foot, and just before leaving the table I carefully put it back on. I wondered why my feet were attracting so much attention on the ballroom floor, and, looking down, I discovered I had on one red and one white slipper. The woman sitting next to me at the table must have been resting her foot, too, for I had one of her slippers and she had mine. H. S.

Taking a Taste.

It was at a soda fountain while eating ice cream and watching the morning panorama downtown when suddenly some one at my elbow said, "Does mine taste better than yours?" and, turning around, I found I had been eating out of his dish. I made for the nearest exit amid broad smiles that went down the counter. H. R. M.

Suitors' Mistakes Contest.

Did you make a mistake that cost you the one you wanted to win more than any other? Was it an unkind remark, a selfish deed, a mean or careless one, an error or tendency of your past come to light? "The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published on "The Mistake That Cost Me the One I Wanted Most to Win." Address Doris Blake, "Chicago Tribune."

Mistake to Have Friends.

I was working in a paper mill in Michigan and one day in a spirit of fun I slipped a snapshot of myself in a tab of paper and wrote my name and address on the back. A young man working in a railroad office in Chicago found the picture and wrote to me. I answered and quite a lengthy correspondence was carried on between us. Later he came out to see me and I introduced him to my best girl friend, and would you believe it, he fell in love with and married her.

Is it a mistake to have friends? I'll say it is. H.

Pinched.

We had been acquainted for some time and one day while we were out walking an officer of the law came hurrying up, and I lost my escort. H. B.

Childhood Ambition Contest.

Did you ever have a childhood ambition—a humorous one? Of course you did. And what you did wasn't anything like what you dreamed. Tell us what your great ambition was—and then tell us how far short you fell. Do it in 250 words, on one side of the paper, and address manuscripts to Childhood Ambition Editor, Chicago Sunday Tribune. For each story printed $1 will be paid. No manuscripts returned.

Leading the Band.

A childish ambition of mine was recalled the other day when the "liberty" parade passed by. I was but a wee lassie when the boys marched away at the time of the Spanish-American war. As I stood on the curb of one of the streets, with my hand clasped tightly in mother's the band passed by.

My Cousin led the band. O, how it fascinated me when he waved his baton aloft and went through so many fantastic motions! I told mother then if some day I could be a band leader like that and march ahead of the soldiers I would be happy.

The other day I saw the wonderful jackies' band pass. O, that leader! I think he thrilled me as much as did the music the band played. And I longed to be there, down on the street, to receive the cheers of the throng.

But I'm a girl and I guess I'll never realize this ambition, unless America, like Russia, should form a "battalion of death." E. M. T.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

EDITED BY JANE EDDINGTON

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

THE WELL FILLED BASKET.

THE first of the food slogans which we have been seeing everywhere for these weeks past is, you know, "Buy it with thought." That means that every time we go to market we know pretty well what we want and what we are going to pay for it. We should have a conception of the whole like some compact packet or let us say the well filled basket. In many cases the filling of a basket may limit our more or less wandering desires for everything we see. Some people want to buy some of each kind of nice fruit they see; I do, and others have other temptations.

It takes more moral courage to swing the market basket on our arm, and face the sales people in the grocery where we have had a charge account than some of us possess or will key ourselves up to exercising. The finer and more reliable our store, the harder the task, if this place is not giving encouragement to the basket. For truly busy people such stores will always be invaluable. However, the greater part of the trade at such places has not been from busy people, at least workaday busy people. On the other hand, a surprisingly large number of unworkaday people, with a mind to be thrifty, have proudly loaded their glorified carryalls in the way of motor cars not only with provisions from the regular stores but from outlying gardens and wholesale markets.

Some high class groceries have made the use of the market basket easy by adopting the plan of charging 5 cents for each delivery of goods or of giving a discount to the buyer who does his own "toting."

Regardless of any "cash and carry" system, the market basket comes into repute at this season of the year. Magnificent baskets of fruit, gift baskets containing the Thanksgiving dinner, Good Fellow baskets, beautiful baskets containing the makings of a salad, including a bottle of beautiful Mayonnaise—all these are increasingly popular.

To stock a basket well is really a budget making problem reduced to one of the smallest and simplest units. To make a budget is simply to plan to the last cent how you are going to spend your money. It is keeping accounts beforehand. The wise woman in order that she may not get discouraged, because she did not come out as she expected to, allows a certain amount for incidentals, lessening that amount as she becomes more experienced. This business of lessening it may become a sort of game with her. If she saves on the regular things she may allow herself the privilege of more incidentals; if she spends more she may penalize herself in some not unpleasant way by going without the incidentals.

A common list for the Thanksgiving basket is: Turkey, celery, cranberries, sugar, sweet potatoes, white potatoes, butter, bread, and incidentals. Squash or turnips may be among the incidentals for one, nuts and raisins for another. In making gift baskets this year canned goods and preserves will have a considerable place, and a comb of honey is always a lovely thing to include. Besides, the jellies and jams, home made candies, popcorn balls, or home made crackerjack, etc., are included in the basket.

There is another item that is a rather nice thing to include in a gift basket, if you know how to do it—namely, a little money. The "Lady from Philadelphia" once said: "When it may be bestowed money is never unwelcome. Nearly every one has some cherished want tucked away in the hopeful corner of the heart, and a gift of money helps towards it realization." We are becoming increasingly sensible about this matter of bestowing money, where it is the most suitable thing to give. Ladies from Philadelphia find pretty ways of doing it, perhaps some more fanciful than necessary, but by playful suggestions the money plays a double role. Paper candlesticks with a rolled greenback for candle, greenback shawls for dolls with sentiments attached, framed money, etc., are some of the ways.

A Tomato Preserve.

Perhaps there are millions of cans of home canned tomatoes in our homes this year. If we want to make gift use of some of them, perhaps we can make them go farthest and serve the prettiest purposes by making them over into preserves. Recently a man reader sent me a sample of some beautiful preserves of a lovely light red and brilliant color, highly satisfactory for marmalade use, with the following:

"I used at first eleven pounds of tomatoes, stewing them fifteen minutes, poured off three pounds of juice to use in soup and to reduce the quantity of liquid in the tomatoes. To the remaining eight pounds I added six oranges, peeled and cut fine, two lemons cut the same way and eight pounds of sugar, then boiled all together to near 218 on candy thermometer."

Any woman can adapt this recipe to suit her quantity, dividing by two or four. It is a pretty thing for small glasses. If she likes it she may thank a business man who writes, "Various lines of cooking, candy making, etc., are but a diversion for me."

Stuffed Celery.

Various people at this season want to know how to stuff celery. Often plain soft cheese is used or cheese and pimento paste, but here is the recipe of one of America's most accomplished cooks:

"Select the tender heart of crisped celery. Wash thoroughly and dry with a crash towel. Then fill the little groove in each blade with the following mixture: To one jar of cheese rubbed to a paste with a small quantity of mayonnaise—making the whole of the consistency of cottage cheese—add one and a half tablespoons of green pepper finely chopped and a few grains of cayenne. Heap the cheese in these grooves, gradually tapering off toward the leafy ends. Arrange them in a celery dish and pass them with the soup course."

Bread Sauce.

From the same source I take this recipe, which makes a sauce to be served around wild fowl or roast chicken:

"Cook thirty-five minutes two cups of milk in a double boiler with one-half cup of stale bread crumbs and a small onion stuck with half a dozen cloves. Remove onion and season sauce with three-fourths teaspoon of salt, one-fourth teaspoon of paprika, a few grains each of cayenne and nutmeg; lastly add two and a half tablespoons of butter. Brown some coarser crumbs in butter and sprinkle over top of sauce after it is turned around roast birds."

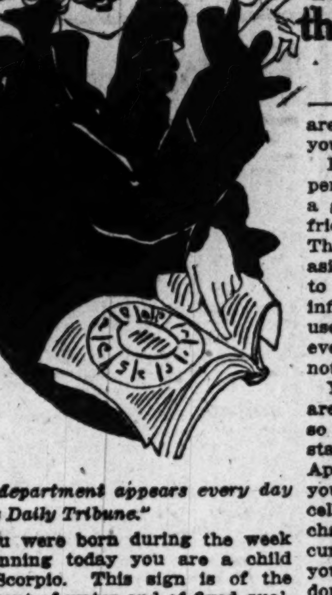
Doris Blake Says



If you were born this week you are

Secretive.

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

Have you a perplexing love affair in which you need the counsel of a friend? Write Doris Blake, care "The Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply send stamped and addressed envelope.

IF you were born during the week beginning today you are a child of Scorpio. This sign is of the element of water and of fixed quality. A true protégé of this sign is shrewd, secretive, critical, cautious, and determined. Together with these qualities you inherit such great magnetism and charm of manner that people are irresistibly drawn to you, and it has been said that the most powerful natures for good or evil have been born under this sign.

You carry always an element of secrecy about you and you seem to delight in balking the curiosity of others. By your charm and sympathy you lead people to confide to the utmost in you and yet you reveal no secrets of your own. It is well, however, that secrets are safe with you, and in this respect you make an ideal friend.

If you are a worldly minded Scorpio person, and, unfortunately, there are a great many of them, you use your friends to advance your own interests. These friends you drain dry and cast aside, when they are no longer of use to you, but you take them up with infinite tact if you again find them useful. You calculate to a penny what every one is worth to you and take nothing else into consideration.

Your love of self is abnormal. You are critical to an extreme degree, but so sensitive yourself that you cannot stand a word of censure from others. Approbation is the breath of life to you. Your innate fixity of purpose, excellent executive ability, and dislike of change nearly always result in a secure and influential position in life for you. Though you display a desire to dominate and govern others, it is doubtful if the majority of you are ambitious beyond the point that will give you a comfortable, easy living. If once your ambition is aroused, however, your entire energy is put to the wheel and great things are accomplished.

You spend money freely on yourself and cannot in any sense be called generous. You are domestic to a certain degree in your tastes, but in order to enjoy wedded happiness you must conquer first your desire to rule and your inborn selfishness.

All Scorpio people will never be truly happy until they show genuine interest in the lives and welfare of others, for it is in complete forgetfulness of self together with sacrifices, that their chance for mental contentment lies.

You will succeed in all martial employments, and as doctor, surgeon or mechanical engineer. You would also be a good detective, designer or inventor.

Your most fortunate months are January and July and Tuesday is for you the luckiest day.

Your colors are scarlet, golden brown and black. Your birthstone is the topaz.

Not Worth It.

"Dear Miss Blake: When a young man asks to kiss me how can I refuse without losing his friendship?

"KATHERINE E."

Well, Katherine, if the friendship depends wholly upon your generosity with kisses, it is not worth the price. You can, however, laugh away a man's impetuosity sometimes without carrying it to the extreme of ridicule. And then you can be perfectly frank and tell him that you don't believe in a girl being promiscuous or common with her caresses.

Two Queries.

"Dear Miss Blake: Will you please advise me, through your columns, what to say to a girl when asking her to a party or if you wish to see her home?

"T. M. G."

You might say, "I wonder if you would care to go to the Blank's party with me?" When asking to take a young lady home, say, "May I have the pleasure of escorting you home?"

Take a Chance.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a young lady of 30 and do you think it proper for me to go walking with a young man after dark if father goes along and carries a lantern? Thanking you for your advice, I remain

"HELEN B."

Provided father's lantern carries a light guaranteed never to fail, I think a young lady of 30 might take a chance.

ETIQUETTE

by ELIZABETH VAN RENSSELAER

THE CHURCH WEDDING.

Any question on etiquette will be answered if you write to Elizabeth Van Rensselaer, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply inclose a stamped, addressed envelope. Please write on one side of the paper only.

MANY young people about to start out on the "big adventure" of their lives come to me to ask the particulars of a church wedding. For all who are similarly perplexed the following hints and suggestions may prove helpful:

First, in a church wedding, as regards the order of proceeding to the altar: After the minister has taken his place in the chancel, the bridegroom and best man enter by the vestry door and take their places at the right of the chancel steps. Next, the ushers come down the aisle, two by two, and form a semicircle. They are followed by the bridesmaids, walking in pairs. After these comes the flower girl (if such there be), who immediately precedes the maid or matron of honor. In case of there being both, the former precedes the latter. Last comes the bride, on her father's left arm.

The bride's attendants walk slowly to the chancel steps and form a semicircle inside that of the ushers. When the bride reaches the step or steps leading to the altar, the bridegroom comes forward accompanied by his best man. In like manner the maid or matron of honor is the only one to attend the bride directly, after her father has "given her away" and rejoined his wife in the front pew, the pew of honor.

The duties of the bride's main attendant are to hold the bridal bouquet during the service, to remove her glove, at least from the ring finger, if gloves are worn, and to put back her veil at the end of the ceremony. The best man has the wedding ring in readiness to hand to the bridegroom at the proper moment. His other duties are to see that a carriage is sent for the minister [or perhaps I should say auto in these days of nonhorseless but many horsepowered vehicles], and the paying of the minister's fee, which the bridegroom has previously intrusted to his care.

In the case of home weddings the same general scheme is carried out, though, of necessity, on a smaller scale. Exquisite simplicity and ease of execution are the keynotes to a really lovely wedding—be it large or small—after the correct form and formulae have been learned and instituted.

EMMA A.: The so-called "double ring" ceremony is not as customary in this country as it is in European countries. However, it is still permissible. Personal preference has a good deal to do in deciding the style of the wedding ring. Nowadays the woman's ring is usually a thin band of gold or platinum, while the man's is wider and heavier. The bride buys the ring for the bridegroom and chooses it with as much care and forethought as she expects him to use in selecting hers.

* *

J. G.: Any light refreshments are suitable for an afternoon club meeting. If you are all tired of ice cream and cake, why not try chocolate with whipped cream, nuts and dainty sandwiches of one or two kinds?

Youngest Woman Over 50 I Know.

Is there among your acquaintances a woman 50 years young, or 60, or even 80? What is the secret of her eternal youth? What is she doing to beat Father Time? For the benefit of the rest of womankind, who want to grow old young, please tell us about her. "The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published. Write on one side of the paper. No letters returned. Names will not be disclosed if you request it. Address Antoinette Donnelly, "Chicago Tribune."

Finds Fun in Everything.

The youngest old woman I ever knew was 81 the day I was 18, and so we gave a little celebration for her, inviting her old friends. After lunch had been served she hopped up, ran to the top of the stairs, and said, "Come on, everybody! Let's slide down the banisters." This she proceeded to do, to the great delight of all the other old ladies present. She was as spry as a cricket and a real pal to me. She used to say that when a girl her pleasures were so scarce she learned to take pleasure from every little thing, and so kept her heart young. M. T.

Climbed a Mountain.

My grandmother is 76. Last summer she climbed up a mountain for a distance of about five miles with my grandfather, who is 79. Last summer they bought a home in Utah and grandma had a big garden and canned 200 quarts of fruit and vegetables, per Hoover. And she doesn't look a day over 50 and is strong and straight. M. S.

SUFFERED AGONY CUTICURA HEALED

Rash on Forehead. Very Unsightly. Itching Intense. Developed Into Sore Eruptions. Used One Cake Soap and Two Boxes Ointment.

"I had a severe rash on my forehead. It was very unsightly and red, and the skin was inflamed and sore. The itching was very intense; I suffered agony all the time. My hair got very thin and dry, and fell out in large quantities. I felt I could not comb it or make it look glossy. The breaking out later developed into sore eruptions.

"The trouble lasted two months before I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I was healed in two weeks after I had used one cake of Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Ointment." (Signed) Miss Eva Berlin, 662 S. Parsons Avenue, Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 14, 1917.

When used for every-day toilet purposes Cuticura Soap not only cleanses, purifies and beautifies but it prevents many little skin troubles if assisted by occasional use of Cuticura Ointment to soothe and heal the first signs of skin troubles. Absolutely nothing better.

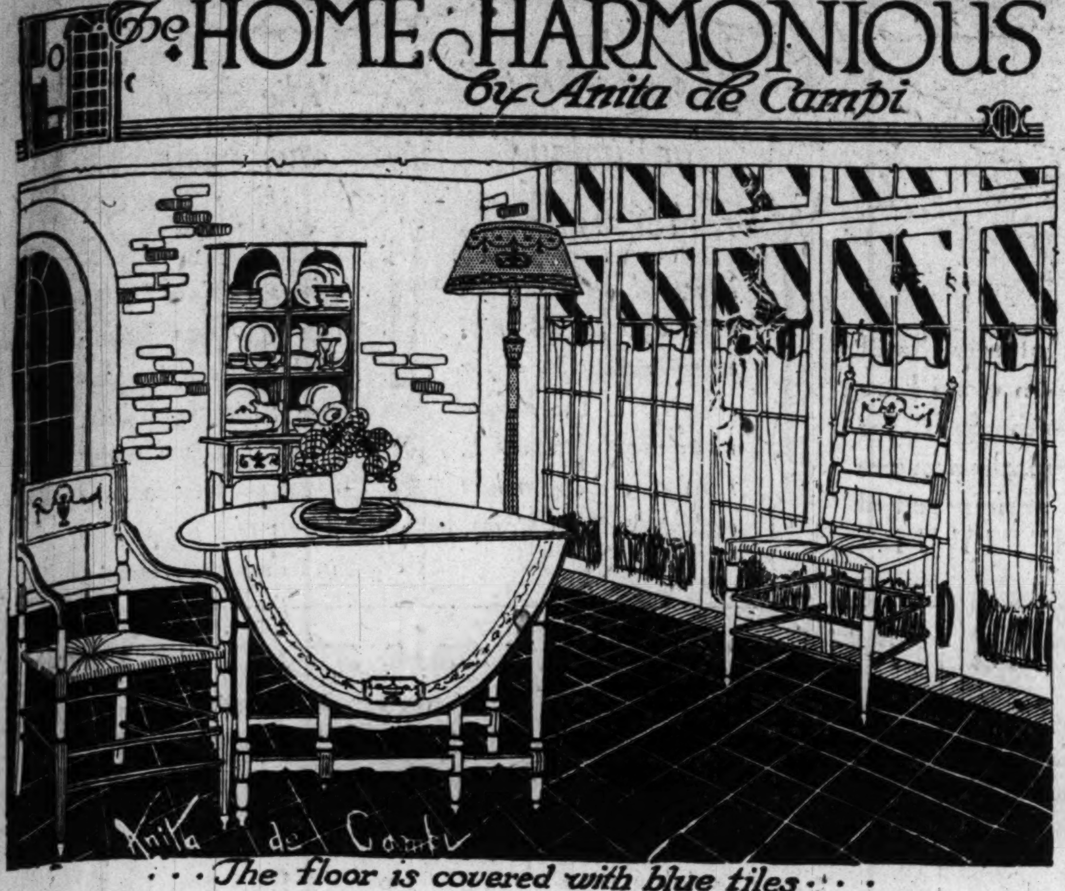
The HOME HARMONIOUS

by Anita de Campi



. . . The floor is covered with blue tiles . . .

Miss de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problems pertaining to interior decorations. Address your letter to Miss Anita de Campi, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Inclose a stamped, addressed envelope if you wish a personal reply.

WHAT shall it be, breakfast room, writing room, winter garden, lounging room, guest's room, or sewing room? The ordinary sunroom can so easily be any one of these, depending solely upon the kind of furniture that is placed in it. In any case it is almost sure to be the most cheerful spot in the home.

Much latitude is allowed in point of decoration. Things that might be indecorous in other rooms are quite permissible here. The place is as pampered as a pretty "only child." Particularly is wide range given in point of color schemes. Those selected as a rule are gay and bright. A good plan is to repeat the colors used in the adjoining room in brighter tones. Almost instinctively when we come into the clear daylight we choose the tints that are unequivocally primary and secondary. It is the same instinct that prompts us to plant in our gardens masses of bright blooming flowers. We leave the sad tints to the mercy of shadows.

Beautiful furniture is now manufactured expressly for sunroom use. It is usually in light neutral tinted enamel, with touches of color in small motifs, while draperies, cushions, etc., are more vividly decorative.

Some conservative artists consider the sunroom as merely a part of the room which it adjoins and use the same style of furniture throughout.

Every season a few distinct novelties crop up. This year a really new feature lies in the floor treatment. Carpets, rugs, etc., are dispensed with and the floor is covered with colored glazed tiles. The illustration here gives an adequate idea of the effect.

The room in the picture has a tiled floor of ultramarine blue. The furniture is in light Wedgwood blue with classic little motifs in white. The walls are gray. This all sounds cold, and would be were it not for the gold colored silk gauze gathered across the windows. The rush bottom seats of the chairs are natural straw colored, the lampshade is yellowed parchment, and the dishes showing through the glass door of the cupboard are of purple luster ware. The inside of the little cupboard is painted apple green.

A certain shade of light brown—not coffee and cream, but coffee and milk—a washy light brown, is ugly, but it makes an excellent foil for clear light colors. A sunroom with side walls in this shade has deep cream furniture and chintz draperies showing much sage and dark green on a brown ground with touches of saffron and pink in the pattern. The dishes are canary yellow and the curtains are of silver tissue. On the chairs and settee are loose cushions covered with light green silver and silk thread Japanese brocade.

A guest's room sunroom that is thoroughly feminine in its accoutrements is furnished in natural wicker. On the wicker day bed there is a mattress covered with a slip cover of light turquoise sunfast, neatly boxed. On this are a number of dainty cushions. By happy accident a fringed scarf of turquoise and sand colored striped silk is thrown over one bed end.

The cushions are of various shapes and sizes. Two bolster shaped cushions made to match the mattress cover are at the ends and the others are tossed pell-mell. Willfully at variance with the delicate pink, sage, blue, mauve, and straw colors of the other cushions is one covered with black oilcloth, and trimmed with rushings of silk ribbon in different bright colors, and further trimmed with worsted yarn stitching, and with crocheted flowers of colored worsted. It is the most perverse bit of decoration, yet it is piquant. The loose cushions on the chairs are turquoise sunfast with the exception of one which is a vivid scarlet silk.

The floor is covered with a violet velvet rug. In this room is a wicker writing table with a glass top, and above it is a mirror framed in a cream enamel frame with light colored flowers in relief. This desk and glass serve on occasion as a dressing table, toilet articles being kept in one drawer.

A sunroom sewing room offers the most delightful possibilities. The woman who sews prettily has mastered a most irresistible accomplishment. Five o'clock tea served in a sunroom is indeed pleasant. It is most agreeable for the few chosen friends to come and bring their knitting and spend a delightful hour in a good light. Sewing boxes and baskets and knitting bags and all such paraphernalia may be attractive as well as useful in our omnipresent Red Cross work.

Such cunning little war work stands have been devised and little rockers to put beside them and drop leaf tables on which to spread things out and wee "chair arm" tables with sliding drawers and small compartments. Little stands, too, are made with dropsides that open up to about the size of cutting tables. Some new wicker baskets are made to hang to one side of the sewing table. These are lined with colored silk, and if hung to the chair arm make nice receptacles for worsted ball while knitting. Desirable, too, are the sewing floor lamps having a round shelf midway of the standard to hold sewing. Some have a basket rim to the shelf.

Rather formal in effect is a sunroom dining room furnished in Sheraton furniture. A trelliage ornaments the light gray walls, and is shown again in panels between windows. The simplicity of the window drapery is interesting. A hemmed breadth of silk gauze is stretched to fit and fastened directly to the sash with glass thumb tacks. Drawn down to meet these are roller curtains of glazed chintz in gold and cream color. A basket of flowers in brilliant colors is painted just above the hem of each roller shade. Below the basket, fastened directly to the stiffened hem, is a huge ornamental tassel, seven inches long and repeating the colors of the flowers. At the table center is a Venetian glass bowl filled with fruit.

There are no other ornaments in the room and no other furniture—neither buffet, sideboard, nor cupboard. The floor is done in dull red tiles and the center light is a cluster of electric candles in a Venetian glass lantern frame.

An Italian sunroom, in which the decoration was palpably done by the architect, has floor of red brown tiling, side walls of Caen stone, with French doors and windows, rounded at the top; a round alabaster drop light on blue chains, and an inset in plaster bas relief of "Madonna and Child" in blue and white. Above the inset, over the stone mantel, the Caen stone is overarched, and the frieze and ceiling are of gray plaster. Two marble columns over three feet high support round bowls filled with ferns.

The furniture, limited to a few pieces, is of Italian carved walnut in the characteristic straight effect, with cushions of taupe velvet brocade. Blue and white plaques are inset into the frieze at well placed intervals. It is a room that is satisfying in its rich simplicity. The French doors and windows are entirely uncurtained.

Eighteenth century in its feeling is a writing room in which narrow spaces between windows have been filled with tall built-in bookcases that deepen the window recesses, allowing benches as window seats between them. In this room in a spinet desk, several chairs, a chaise longue, and book trough on small rubber tired wheels.

Picturesque bird cages, hanging baskets, and aquariums are among the accessories for sunroom use. Many of these are so charming that they fairly tempt the wisest among us to commit that greatest of all mistakes in decoration—the crime of overcrowding.

Donald likes to go to the baker's, where he is sure to be given a cake or bun. One day the baker gave him a small cooky, saying, "A very little cake for a very little boy." Donald held it a moment and then handed it back, saying, with a charming smile, "Is bigger."

Clark was 3 years old and a baby sister arrived at his home. One day two women called to see the new arrival and they asked Clark if he was sharing his pennies with his little sister. He paused for a few seconds and then remarked: "O, yes, I give her all the Lincoln pennies 'cause she's afraid of Indians."

I had just seated myself for a cup of tea and rolls when little Henry called to ask if I wanted him to go to the store. I asked him to have a cup of tea with me. He accepted. I asked him how many spoons of sugar should I put in his tea and he said, "One."

I said: "Why, Henry, I thought you loved sugar?"

"I does, but I only takes one spoon now; I's trying to help mind Mr. Hoover."

Having sent Tommy out to play; mother anticipated having a little spare time for herself. However, he had scarcely been out fifteen minutes when he indignantly pounced back in again.

"What brings you back so soon?" inquired mother. "I thought you were out playing with Billy.

"I was, but I'll never play with him again as long as I live," emphatically declared Tommy.

"What did he do?" anxiously asked mother.

"It's not what he did do, but what he didn't do. We played war, he was a German, and I killed him, and he admitted it, and now he won't stay dead."

When my little boy was invited to a little girl's birthday party, I gave him a silk handkerchief to give as a gift. When he came home I was surprised to see the gift in his pocket.

"Why, Martin, did you forget to give your present?" I asked.

"No, mamma," he answered, "the little girl got so many handchkofs, I got nothing, so I kept this."

Lucy was returning from her first afternoon at dancing school. She confided to her mother that there were only three boys in the class whom she knew. "And, O," she said, "I was so exaggerated. Billy didn't ask me to dance."

Before and After Marriage.

Sharing the Income.

My lover was forever railing against the "tightwads," as he called them, who never gave their wives money unless they begged for it and then gave an accounting of even the pennies.

"But," said he, "our marriage will be different, for we will make a partnership affair of it, equally sharing my income." We have now been married five years, and all the money I have had for my personal use is what I can get by going through hubby's pockets in the wee sma' hours.

M. O.

Still Her Lover.

I wish you would print this exception. Ten years ago, when we were a "couple of kids," we were married and today my husband is just as much or more my lover than he was then.

When we were first married and he would come to kiss me good-by before leaving me, my folks would laugh and say: "That won't last long." But it has continued for ten years and I don't think he will forget now. When he comes from his work all he asks is to stay with his family, for we have two dear little children. His greatest desire is to see his family happy.

If it were possible I would have no desire to go back to our life as it was ten years old.

STOMACH UPSET?

That's what thousands of stomach sufferers are doing now. Instead of taking tonics, or trying to patch up a poor digestion, they are attacking the real cause of the ailment—clogged liver and disordered bowels.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets arouse the liver in a soothing, healing way. When the liver and bowels are performing their natural functions, away goes indigestion and stomach troubles.

If you have a bad taste in your mouth, tongue coated, appetite poor, lazy, don't-care feeling, no ambition or energy, troubled with undigested foods, you should take Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are a purely vegetable compound mixed with olive oil. You will know them by their olive color. They do the work without griping, cramps or pain.

Take one or two at bedtime for quick relief, so you can eat what you like. At 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

Scolded by Mr. Ditrichstein

By Percy Hammond

THE hurt feelings of Leo Ditrichstein over the failure here of "The Judge of Zalamea" are put into print, now that he is safely in New York.

We are a scurvy lot, it seems, having no knowledge whatever of Spanish literature and no appreciation of anything that demands the exercise of the imaginative faculty.

Here was a seventeenth century classic, says he, composed by the Shakespeare of Spain, viewed by Chicago ignoramuses through their twentieth century spectacles! Full of such inspiring imaginative detail as hanging an actor in full sight of the audience, the play was scorned because we lacked education in dramatic literature. "All the research for historical accuracy, all the atmosphere of the period, all the labor devoted to the reflection of a world's masterpiece, to say nothing of the efforts of the players and the enterprise of the producers, were lost because of the lack of a standard by which to measure dramatic accomplishment, and the absence of that mental reciprocity so necessary between player and auditor when a character or picture beyond the pale (sic) of our today is represented."

Such wailing as this is singularly unintelligent, even for Mr. Ditrichstein. He ought to know that a classic renews itself and is contemporary with all the ages, and that we were right in looking at "The Judge of Zalamea" through twentieth century spectacles. That we found it so much dramatic junk, battered by translators and adapters until it was but little better than the original was not due to our lack of knowledge. Rather, it was because we did not, like Mr. Ditrichstein, confuse knowledge with information. Names and dates to many pupils of the drama, including Mr. Ditrichstein, are of more importance than taste or perception, thought or experience. Among this community's meager exhibitions of intelligence in the theater is its emphatic rejection of the Calderon cadaver as neither art nor amusement.

In his heart Mr. Ditrichstein must suspect this, because, though bound for more enlightened centers, in the east, he leaves the world's masterpiece behind.

Among the several humiliations of a critic's lot is his inability to advise satisfactorily his acquaintances as to their playgoing. Owning the specious reputation of experience in such matters, clairvoyant powers are frequently attributed to him, and he is expected to know what play will please his inquirers. "Is Eva Tanguay good?" they will ask, naively, if Miss Tanguay is in town, though what they wish to know is "Will I like Eva Tanguay?" They might just as well ask the cook if tripe is good, tripe being good only to those who care for it.

Imagine the perplexing possibilities of such an interrogation as "What is the best show in town?" Especially when you recall having seen Willie Ritchie, the pugilist, enraptured at a performance of "Androcles and the Lion," and having caught your most scholarly friend, a man of faultless taste in books, enjoying at the Columbia an exhibition by Jean Bedini's Puss-Puss Girls. If you are cautious you evade and equivocate, and are set down as of not much account as a dramatic critic.

However, there has been discovered a scheme which works pretty well in counsel as to "A Successful Calamity." Asked if that comedy is good you say at once, "Do you like 'The Man Who Came Back'?" Informed that your applicant for guidance regards "The Man Who Came Back" as good, you then reply, "You will not like 'A Successful Calamity.'"

With several other readers of THE TRIBUNE I wish to dissent (a little) from THE TRIBUNE's recent animadversions upon Mr. Gillette's acting in "A Successful Calamity." His histrionic wares are known and staple, a trade-marked product that does not vary. When theatergoers buy Mr. Gillette they want the Gillette of "Secret Service" and "Sherlock Holmes," with all the strident tensity and furtiveness of manner and the reticent exaggerations that the name implies. To be honest is better than to be artistic, he suspects, and so he sacrifices his esthetic inclination to commercial probity.

Another mitigating element in Mr. Gillette's performance is that his lines, obviously, are a sop to the so-called groundlings. The humorous and observant Miss Kumner provides the other rôles with speech which, though uncannily fitted to the characters, is full of sly satire whose fun may escape the less acute auditor. When Mr. Gillette is told by his son, the delicious Mr. Keedwell, that Uncle Jerry is crazy to have him in his office, Mr. Gillette's undeniably effective but rather frayed rejoinder is that Uncle Jerry must be crazy to have such an ambition. His scene with the doctor is merely linked hoakum, long drawn out, with almost every remark in dire contrast to the delicate, natural humor of the other lines. But it is so efficacious in amusing nearly all of us that to change it, no doubt, would be to weaken the play's appeal. Besides, there is enough good comedy and good acting elsewhere in "A Successful Calamity" to make it the best entertainment in town for those who are not committed to "The Man Who Came Back."

George Arliss and the Giles family of Virginia are having an acrid controversy over the character and habits of Gov. Giles, a contemporary of Alexander Hamilton, the hero of Mr. Arliss' new play. The Gileses claim that their ancestor was a noble gentleman; but Mr. Arliss submits history to prove that he was the boorish and unscrupulous desperado pictured in the play. "Hamilton" will put in to the Blackstone Nov. 26, succeeding "Mr. Jubilee Drax."

Herman Lieb, who introduced Wilson avenue to the drama last summer, is again a player for the nickelshows. He is assisting Miss Emily Stevens to make a picture called "Daybreak."

Arnold Daly has decided not to bereave the cast of "Why Marry?" of his volatile presence, though he had informed his managers that on Dec. 1 he would be on his way. Mr. Goodwin and Mr. Breese are said to have implored him to remain. Mr. Daly is a critic as well as an actor. In a bookshop the other day he tabbed Joseph Conrad as "a neurasthenic old maid."

The title of Miss Ethel Barrymore's presentation of "Camille" will be "The Lady of the Camellias." Miss Rose Coghlan and Conway Tearle are in her company and B. Iden Payne is her director.

Henry W. Savage, owner of "Pom Pom," derides Miss Elsie Janis' announcement that she will play that opera in London, and says that Mizzi Hajos is the little lady who will do it, if any one does. To which derision Miss Janis retorts: "I would like to see him try to present a star from Austria-Hungary in London. 'Twould be a pretty sight!"

From A. L. Erlanger, once the predominant overlord of the theater, come these remarks on business and the war:

"As far as the theatrical business is concerned, the big attractions will not suffer, and the little entertainments, unless they have very strong material, will be overlooked by the public. The theatrical business man, who has not been wasteful, and who is strongly intrenched, is going to pass through the ordeal as solid business men have before—possibly a little scorched, but not materially injured."

Arthur Hopkins, the able impresario of "A Successful Calamity" and other intelligible entertainments, will produce "The Gypsy Trail" tomorrow—"The Gypsy Trail" being modern, romantic, and by Robert Housum. Ernest Glendenning, who hit the trail as Younth in "Experience," is in it, and so is Miss Phœbe Foster, who was so nice and sticky last season in a dramatic praline called "A Cinderella Man."

Miss Marguerite Clark says it is all piffle, the report about her leaving the nickelshows for musical comedy. She will, she says, stick to the pictures as long as there is a foot of fillum or a drop of developing fluid. Other movie ladies grouped with Miss Marguerite in a reported desertion from silence to sound were Misses Norma Talmadge, Miss Anita Stewart, Lucille Lee Stewart, and Elaine Hammerstein.

In London Mrs. Patrick Campbell acts the medium in "The 13th Chair" as a French woman instead of with an Irish accent, as her American sisters do. The papers say she's great.

Haddon Chambers' "The Saving Grace," which is unusually successful in London, will be presented in America by the Frohman corporation. The play was ordered by the Frohmans for Miss Billie Burke when she was in their service, and her defection caused it to be shelved. Charles Hawtrey and Miss Emily Brooks play it in England.

When "Parlor, Bedroom, and Bath" starts for the east next week it will have a new actress to play the nutty bride who elopes with her friend's husband. Miss Miriam Collins, last year the attractive leading woman for W. T. Hodge, is the lady referred to.

"Girl o' Mine," by Philip Bartholomae and Frank Tours, is booked for early production by the Shuberts, and with Walter Catlett, Edna Wallace Hopper, Dorothy Dickson, and Marie Nordstrom. Other things impending are "Flo-Flo," by Fred De Gresac and Silvio Hein, and "Two Streets," by Koby Kahn, a serious playwright.

Miss Flora Zabelle, not Miss Louise Dresser, will be the principal player in "Have a Heart," which next Sunday will succeed "Miss Springtime" at the Illinois.

"Upstairs and Down" will pass from the Cort in two weeks to make room for "Johnny, Get Your Gun," a farce by Miss Dorothy Donnelley and Lawrence Burke.

Burns Mantle's New York Letter

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Money is the root of all the Ziegfeld-Dillingham revues. Money the root, refined burlesque the trunk—and, of course, you know about the limbs. Without money, loads of it, there would be no gorgeous mise-en-scene to distinguish them from an ordinary vaudeville entertainment. Quite ordinary sometimes. Stripped of their gorgeousness they would be as bare as a plucked peacock—and I can think of nothing barer than that at the moment.

And yet, fed up on stage lavishness though we are in New York, it still is impossible to sit through one of these huge girl, gown, and scenery orgies without calling out the first and second line of superlatives in an effort to do the mere sight of them justice.

As a result the local play reporters often create a misleading impression as to the intrinsic worth of the entertainment itself. This, I can readily believe, irritates a good many people. Four days after the new Century theater revue "Miss 1917" was revealed I stood within earshot of a pair of hardened Broadwayites who were discussing it.

"And what's the hit of the show?" demanded one, answering himself before the other had a chance to speak, which is a Broadway custom. "Bessie McCoy singing 'The Yama Yama Man.' My God! And I should pay $7 a seat to hear 'The Yama Yama Man!'" His manner plainly indicated that he shouldn't.

But this particular boulevardier was wrong. Miss McCoy is, indeed, the individual favorite of the proceedings, not so much because she revives her old song and its accompanying dance with a good deal of the old spirit, but rather because she is the widow of the late Richard Harding Davis, who was well beloved in these parts and whose many friends are now eager to help Mrs. Davis back to a favored popularity on the stage.

He was wrong again, because "The Yama Yama" incident is no more than a five minute bit in a four hour entertainment. But back of his specific criticism he had a justified complaint in that "Miss 1917," pictorially beautiful and sartorially magnificent though it is, is still without novelty or conspicuous quality in the vaudeville and burlesque features which are its foundation.

The feature singled out for the most praise in the present entertainment is a truly gorgeous ballet, or a "poem-choreographic," if you prefer, entitled "Falling Leaves." It seeks to visualize the terror of dryads and nymphs, not to mention a few playful satyrs, at the approach of winter and the advent of the first chilling blasts of the the wind. Adolph Bolm, formerly one of M. Diaghileff's Russian ballet, impersonates Wind, giving frequent imitations of anything in his line from a rustling breeze, that brings down only a few leaves and frightens the dryads, to a perfect tornado at the finale that fairly shakes the branches of the forest bare and covers many of the bare artistes as well. Pictorially the ballet offers a series of quite wonderful pictures, animated but nicely proportioned in coloring and grouping. The revolving stage is used, and as it turns slowly the dancers playfully chase each other from scene to scene through a seemingly endless vista.

For the rest "Miss 1917" is a burlesque and beauty show. The modiste who has fashioned the gowns has spared nothing but material. Lew Fields heads the comedians, stipulating I gather from the character of his assistants, that none should be engaged who might possibly threaten his supremacy. Mr. Fields repeats most of his music hall burlesqueries, including a barroom scene in which he serves whisky with a medicine dropper and sweetens drinks by allowing a cube of sugar to rest in the glass while he counts ten.

Irene Castle dances without Vernon, who continues to teach the young Canadian aviators how to fly. Bessie McCoy Davis, with flesh added but spirit unchecked, is the feature of an old favorite song revue which includes the choruses of Mabel Barrison's "Sammy," Peter Dailey's "Dinah," Edna May's "Follow On," etc. Knowing your vaudeville, you will know what the others do. They include Brice and King, Van and Schenk, those sweet singers off the key; Harry Kelly, Savoy and Brennan, Cecil Lean and Cleo Mayfield, George White and Ann Pennington. Vivienne Segal, soprano, and Marion Davies, who represents the plot by playing the name part in the first scene and the last, are others. Far down in the list of those who oblige obscurely is the name of Pauline Hall. Who's she? Ask dad; he knows.

Two idols topples in the New York theaters last week. And one of them fell. In neither instance was the idol herself to blame. Old Father Time was responsible in the one instance and a poor play in the other.

The idols were Alice Nielsen and Laurette Taylor. Miss Nielsen sought to revive the spell of long ago, which was the spell of her youth, and Miss Taylor did her level best to galvanize into life a puppet play furnished her by her husband-playwright, J. Hartley Manners.

Of the two Miss Taylor was the more fortunate. It will take more than one poor play to discourage the loyal following she started building with "The Bird of Paradise," and brought to a state of complete subjugation with "Peg o' My Heart."

But of Miss Nielsen's future we are not so hopeful. She has evidently waited too long to return gracefully to the light opera répertoire which was once so easy for her and with which she reigned supreme. The formality of the grand opera school has left its mark upon her. And the present generation of playgoers, knowing her not at all or only as the heroine of a pretty legend, told in the glowing enthusiasm of those who do remember her, refuses to accept the substitute.

Miss Taylor's play is "The Wooing of Eve." In it she appears as a well bred and mannerly young American girl visiting in London. Arrived there she finds her cousin, a weeping willow ingenue, about to be married to a middle aged baronet who once had been her own ardent suitor.

They had quarreled and parted five years before because the baronet, mixing Chopin and moonlight with his ardor, had allowed the everlasting Adam in him to take charge of the situation. He became rough in his wooing of Eve and she sent him away. Then, Evelike, she followed after. Now, having found him, she does not intend that he shall get away again. But how can she prevent his marrying her cousin? Ah, suddenly she has it! Why not a scandal? Why not visit Sir Phillip in his rooms, at night, and be discovered there by "witnesses." Surely this should discourage any nice girl, and set any nice girl's father by the ears.

Eve arranges the visit, but is caught in her own trap. Sir Phillip, at the piano, again resorts to Chopin and again Eve trembles at the edge of trouble. Stands, as it were, at the edge of an apple orchard gazing wistfully at the fruit. But Sir Phillip discovers the conspiracy and pretends to hate her for it. Threatens also to punish her by keeping her locked in with him all night. But she gets away and there is a third act left in which she confesses her love and is again wooed and won. Cousin, having really preferred a poor curate all the time, is handed over to that young man and all is well.

All is well, except with the play. That is decidedly ill. A makeshift comedy offering but fleeting glimpses of Miss Taylor at her charming best, and lacking the very necessary virtues of coherence and plausibility.

News and Views About Music

By Frederick Donaghey.

TAKING part in the music of Chicago this week are Mischa Levitzki, Theo Karle, Jascha Heifetz, Tina Lerner, Harold Bauer, Galli-Curci, Melba, Rosa Raisa, and Muratore—a list of unqualified somebodies, and including at least four of whom the loosely-used "great" is a correct descriptive. Heifetz is not in mind, at that, as one of the four; while there seems to be no reason to doubt that the young Russian is in clear possession of the talent to justify the extraordinary praise of him printed by the critics in New York, he is, so far, unknown in this neighborhood. No other week of the season can possibly be marked by greater provocation for going to the halls where the merchandise is music.

Heifetz says that his teacher, Leopold Auer, is eager to come to the United States this winter. He is the teacher of Eddy Brown, of Zimbalist, and of Elman, as well; but he regards Heifetz as his finest product.

Mr. Stock takes the Orchestra tomorrow to Milwaukee, and on Tuesday to Madison.

Victor Herbert will, in next week's program, get another opus into the Orchestra's répertoire, which holds two. Mr. Stock lists his Irish rhapsody for the concerts of Nov. 30 and Dec. 1. A good part of what Herbert has written retains its vitality in a degree which is amazing in view of the man's fecundity. Thus, one of the musical hits in "Miss 1917," which is the Messrs. Dillingham and Ziegfeld's show for this season in New York's Century theater, is the march from "Babes in Toyland," as old as 1903 in Chicago. The reviewers express delight with most of Herbert's new score, the operetta of "Her Regiment," in which Carolina White was to have been Donald Brian's co-star. He was, at the Manhattan première the other night, called before the curtain to speak; and, doing so, he again vented his ancient grievance that he is unable to find a libretto to which to set what he calls "a real American opera."

Gustav Huberdeau, who returned to the Opera in Friday's revival of "Dinorah," was dressed and ready for Mephistopheles in Thursday's "Faust" when the curtain went up. Baklanoff, who had the rôle, is, in the expressed opinion of Mr. Rabinoff, doing a wrong, an illegal, and an unfriendly act in appearing at all under Campanini, and ought to be singing with the Boston Opera. Rabinoff had been talking injunction; and a deputy was expected to arrive in the Auditorium in time to prevent the big Russian from taking part.

The Boston venture is active again, although Rabinoff recently went into federal bankruptcy for a happy sum, with unpaid wages big in the list of liabilities. Baklanoff's name was in the inventory of those to whom pay for service was due. Tamaka Miura's Butterfly is still a reason for buying seats. "Rigoletto" is an item in the répertoire for this season; and it is for that piece Rabinoff desires Baklanoff to return. Ada Navarette, said to be a Yucatan native, is the coloratura of the company; and Irene Pavloska, for two years Campanini's soubrette, is singing some of the mezzo rôles. Riccardo Martin and Graham Marr remain with the concern.

Mary Garden, as the plan stands, is not to come to the Opera till January. That was the arrangement last season: she opened on Dec. 31, and managed to get in nine performances in the three weeks that remained.

The performances so far given in Campanini's season have been better than before in at least two departments—the orchestra and the dancing. The former, on Monday, did at least as much for the score of "Isabeau" as Mascagni appeared to have done; and again, on Friday night, it came through with a fine performance of Meyerbeer's "Dinorah" music—music which is, taking the opera as a whole, far better than that of either "The Huguenots" or "L'Africaine." I have not since the days when the Metropolitan was an out-and-out German institution heard an orchestra for opera do anything else so well as Campanini's played the beguiling overture. His moving of the overture into the first entr'acte and using it there as a sort of intermezzo was a sane bit of sheer showmanship. Another, while a bit hard on such illusion as the libretto of "Dinorah" permits, was having Galli-Curci take up her encore for the shadow-song on the apron while the stage-hands worked on the succeeding set.

Another of Meyerbeer's discarded operas, "The Star of the North," is in Campanini's mind, although not for this season. Like "Dinorah," it is immeasurably better than his two familiar pieces; and, like "Dinorah," it calls for a special singer. The story is of Peter the Great, who is made a herioc and romantic baritone. Baklanoff comes to mind as the sole available possibility for the part, just as Galli-Curci is the only woman in the known world today for Dinorah, which is something more than a character-name for a bravura singer. When—or, perhaps, if—you go to "Dinorah," try to think of any other coloratura in the part. Tetrazzini, say; or even the Sembrich of her later years in opera.

She is remembered, doubtless, for two engagements as soloist with the Orchestra—five seasons ago, and again three seasons ago. Today's, in the Playhouse, will be her first recital in Chicago.

Jascha Heifetz

He was, on the recent occasion of his American début in New York City, the subject of extraordinary praise in the press. Some of the critics described him as the most accomplished of living violinists. He is to take part in this week's Orchestra program.

The Opera

CAMPANINI'S arrangement of operas and casts for the second week of his ten in the Auditorium involves two repetitions from last week's list; the revival in the subscription of "Tosca" and "Manon"; a Saturday "Carmen" at half-rates; "La Bohême," with Melba and Crimi, Thursday; and the début of Anna Fitziu as Tosca and of Genevieve Vix as Manon—all in addition to this afternoon's "Romeo and Juliet" with Muratore and Galli-Curci, she celebrating in the performance the anniversary of her first Chicago hearing. Stracciari's début in "Rigoletto" has been put off till next Sunday, when Galli-Curci will be the Gilda. This is the scheme:

Today at 3:00—"Romeo and Juliet," first time, with Muratore, Galli-Curci, Maguenat, Swartz, Dufranne (first time this season), Huberdeau, Berat, Dua, Arimondi.

Monday at 8:00—"Tosca," first time, with Fitziu, Crimi, Baklanoff.

Tuesday at 8:00—"Isabeau," with Raisa, Crimi, and first week's cast.

Wednesday at 8:00—"Dinorah," with Galli-Curci and last Friday's cast.

Thursday at 8:00—"La Bohême," first time, with Melba, Sharlow, Crimi, Rimini, Huberdeau.

Saturday at 2:00—"Manon," first time, with Vix, Muratore, Maguenat, Huberdeau, Berat, Dua, Defrere.

Saturday at 8:00—"Carmen," first time, with Maria Claessens (first time this season), Dalmores (ditto), Maguenat, Huberdeau, Peterson, Swartz, Pruzan, Nicolay, Dua.

Campanini will conduct "Dinorah" and "Isabeau"; Sturani, "Tosca" and "La Bohême"; Charlier, "Romeo and Juliet," "Manon," and "Carmen."

The Week's Bills

JASCHA HEIFETZ, whose talent for the violin is reported to be extraordinary, comes to Chicago as the soloist of the Orchestra's Friday-Saturday program, with Tschaikowsky's concerto as his medium. He wil provide the second part of the bill. The first will be devoted to Taniew's overture called "L'Orestie" and Rachmaninow's second symphony, which was the feature of Mr. Stock's second bill of last season. This week's will be all-Russian.

The Boston English Opera Company, in the Strand, will tomorrow night put on "The Tales of Hoffmann," with Mr. Sheehan, Miss Lillian Steele, Miss Eden, Miss Longan, and Miss De Sellem. Miss Steele, a new member of the company, will be Olympia, the doll. She is a Chicagoan, the daughter of Edward Steele, at one time manager of the Colonial theater. She and the Misses Eden and Longan will be in all performances; Miss De Sellem, as Niclaus, will alternate with Miss Carley, and Mr. Sheehan with Mr. Denton. "The Mikado" will be sung tonight.

Who's Who in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath"

Miss Helen Menken

LEWIS-SMITH PHOTO

By Helen Menken.

Unacquainted as I am with the autobiographical angle of literature, here goes, hit or miss:

I went on the stage at the tender age of 6. 'Twas not from choice. I had to. Father failed in business; we children had to eat and wear clothes—mere conventions but unescapable.

An aunt of ours knew Mrs. Taliaferro, gifted mater of a pair of gifted daughters. She placed me with Annie Russell in "A Midsummer Night's Dream." With a guilty knowledge of cheating the Gerry society, I kept on and on, and successively "joined out" with "The Red Mill," "The Little Princess," De Wolf Hopper in "The Pied Piper," Eddie Foy in "Mr. Hamlet of Broadway," and Mlle. Genee in "The Silver Star."

I had reached the age of 12 minus all schooling. A sister had married Wilfred Clarke, actor. They went abroad. I went along. Two years in a convent in Brighton, England. Came back at 14. Put my hair up and dresses down. Drat the Gerrys! Played stock with Percy Haswell in Cleveland. Ditto in Lynn, Mass., Salem, Mass., Reading, Pa., Utica, N. Y., and other tanks. Then William A. Brady placed me for two seasons. Then with Mr. Drew in "Maj. Pendennis." Am now playing the fiancée in A. H. Woods' production of "Parlor, Bedroom, and Bath" at the Colonial theater.

Right off the Reel

By Mae Tinée.

Bessie Barriscale is looking for another home. She figured that living in a flat would be a change, especially as servants are hard to keep. But expectations have not been realized and Miss Barriscale has decided that there is no place like home.

A camp is being built at Hoquiam, Wash., where George Beban and his company will spend a month taking scenes for his forthcoming production, "Judge of the Strong Heart."

Richard Ordynski, director of the Metropolitan Opera house, New York, has been engaged by Fox to play opposite Theda Bara in a new production, "The Rose of Blood." Mr. Ordynski wrote the scenario.

Mae Murray has purchased a ten acre ranch near San Bernardino, Cal. There is a comfortable house on the place and quite a large garden. Miss Murray is having an outdoor swimming pool constructed, to which water will be carried from Arrowhead springs in the San Bernardino mountains.

Robert Louis Stevenson's dearly loved book, "Treasure Island," is to be the next screen vehicle for the Fox film kiddies. Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin will play the leads.

Dorothy Dalton is the recipient of the following acrostic, written by an ardent admirer:

D—own the dim corridors of memory,
O—ut of my dreams of ancient loves,
R—eturns on goss'mer wings a thought of thee:
O—nly a sigh, like that of cooing doves—
T—hen silence—and I wait through wasted days,
H—oping again to dream, ere twilight grays
Y—outh's springtime, where frail fancy roves,

D—immed by my tears, I see thy face again
A—nd mark the sweetness of thy shadowy smile.
L—ove tempers all my dreams with perfect pain,
T—hen fades the vision, but I linger while
O—ne by one, the dead days past me file,
N—or pause; and all my dreams are vain.

Under the tutelage of Miss Kathleen Clifford, "Fatty" Arbuckle has learned how to knit.

Emmy Wehlen has gone south to take a much needed rest before starting work on her next production.

Did you ever hear of "Yum," Gladys Brockwell's famous critic? Neither did we until a few days ago. "Yum" is Miss Brockwell's bull dog and most constant companion. Whenever one of Miss Brockwell's new features is to be shown, she takes "Yum" into the projection room. "Yum" invariably "finds" her and begins to bark. Miss Brockwell can tell by the degree of his excitement just how well she has done her part.

Billie Rhodes heard a funny noise in a hollow tree not far from her home, and undertook to find out the cause. She found a "bee tree." She tried to smoke the bees out by burning half a pound of smoking tobacco in a hole at the base of the tree, and succeeded so well that for a week Miss Rhodes stayed at home while her maid applied cooling embrocations where they were most needed. Miss Rhodes insists that the joke was on the bees, for when the tree was cut down she found eighty pounds of brown honey.

Ask Me! Ask Me! Ask Me!

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

READER: The photograph of Theda Bara to which you took exception was, in my opinion, one of the best I have ever seen. But then we cannot all agree, I know.

MARGARET M.: Unhappy again? My dear, what am I to do? I love to hear from you, I love to answer your letters, but why you should always write accusing me of indifference is more than I can ever understand. Indeed, I do accept your best wishes and I assure you you have mine in return.

JANIS: It is rather puzzling. The scenes on the subtitles you describe were drawn on mats 4x11 inches. If there is to be more than one subtitle with the same scene a space is left blank in the original drawing and the words inserted according to need.

L. R. H.: I have no photographs that do me justice, said she, delicately coughing up her sleeve.

NORTH SIDER: Yes, I am sure you are right. The producing company tells me the mansion in the picture you mention is an estate in the neighborhood of the studio. O, yes, of course, it would be necessary to secure permission from the owner before incorporating a private home into the movies.

A PICTURE FAN: You are right, my friend, said she.

ELEANOR B.: I agree with you in your words of commendation. The man who played the part you mention was quite remarkable. I don't in the least mind your typing your letters to me; in fact, to be truthful, I think I rather like you to do it.

L McC.: You don't like Douglas? My, what an original child! The others you mention, however, I think are well worth seeing at almost any time. Eugene O'Brien played opposite Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." Awfully glad to be of service.

ELEANOR: I am rather afraid that you lose your wager, Eleanor. Too bad!

P. E. M.: The picture you mention has been shown—funny if you were watching for it that you didn't see it.

Many Slackers Among Women; Indifferent to America's Peril

By Mme. X.

GREAT events are duplicated in small ones. So the storm of criticism that assailed Lloyd George last week because he had the courage to stand up and speak the truth; the courage to tell the English people that the allies' lack of coördination was costing them the war, was repeated in miniature here when this column ventured to state last week that the success of the opera was imperiled by the lack of support from former boxholders. It is with some justifiable pride that we venture to point out that our critics, those who asserted that the article in question was "in poor taste," "ill-timed," "damaging to the opera," were without exception ex-boxholders. This being so, we leave our case to the decision of the court, merely calling attention to the fact that the full galleries and balconies show that a lack of love of music does not prevail among the less well off in our community. Alas, that opera cannot thrive on the patronage of the cheaper seats!

The report is current that 1,000 annual $10 memberships of the Art institute have dropped off this autumn. This seems unbelievable. If the opera should fail of adequate support, if the Art institute should be crippled, what do you think would be the effect on our enemy? Would he grieve or gnash his teeth—he the high priest of "kultur"? Or would he say: "Ah, see our foes tremble before our invincible might! Even before we smite them they cower and seek cover." And he would be justified. Not while we diminish our support of great civic institutions, cherishing, at the same time, every material comfort, keeping up the usual quota of butlers, maids, valets, and chauffeurs, and the accustomed manner of living can we persuade our foes—or even our friends—of our dauntless courage, our invincible determination to win the war.

Parasites Bred of Sudden Prosperity

How many times is the case repeated in one form or another of the rich young matron who, on registering ten days ago, said that she could undertake no service to the nation, as she was so busy training her housekeeper? It is your time (not your leisure only), your strength to the last dregs (not your surplus vitality), your money (not your spare change), that your country asks of you now. In face of the tremendous need for concentrated effort, how any woman can waste an hour over cards, or over making a gay sweater for herself, or on wandering from shop to shop in idle survey of things she has no intention of purchasing, is a mystery. And yet even now thousands of them are still doing all these things, apparently unmindful of the nation's hour of peril—real peril, too.

As a rule these women slackers belong to that large class, ill begotten product of our sudden and violent prosperity, who have systematically shirked all the great, natural responsibilities of life, such as bearing children, keeping house, serving on boards of philanthropical institutions, etc. As a rule they either live in hotels or in the small apartments with a kitchenette which necessitates going to restaurants for the real meals. These women take massage instead of exercise. They spend the time and money on self-adornment which other women devote to children. They are in evidence in public eating places, at every matinée, and on the boulevards in softly cushioned automobiles. Their hair is generally glossy and perfectly marcelled. Their cheeks are rosily tinted; their nails glisten; their usually overplump forms are clad in the latest fashion. Their self-indulgence and idleness are a menace to our civilization.

Giving Themselves to National Service

In strong contrast to this parasitical class are the thousands—even millions—of splendid women all over this vast country of ours who are giving themselves, body and soul, to national service. They have come forth from every walk of life at the country's call. The registrars at the recent registration of the woman power of the state heard many strange and moving stories from the unknown women who came to write their names on the great roll call. And how they did pour in! The country districts outdid Chicago.

Here our nearly 80,000 volunteer registrars recorded well over 100,000 women capable of work for the country in some one of the 167 classifications, but reports from the town and county registrars make even better showings. Mrs. Daniels of Greenville, Bond county, announces a registration of 90 per cent of the women of that county. Mrs. Smoots of Petersburg says that her returns are not yet all in, but she expects a 100 per cent registration there.

Patriotism burns nowhere more brightly than in the hearts of the women who earn their own livings. Great numbers of these offer their services, free of charge, to the government, to the Red Cross, and to other war relief societies. The Red Cross has to keep open evenings and Saturday afternoons to give these workers their turn in making hospital supplies and other needed articles. The American Fund for French Wounded also has to arrange for evening workers, who, after spending all day at office desks, or over typewriters, or standing behind counters, are still eager to "do their bit" for the needy in France.

Aid Needy Gentle Folk of France

For a peculiarly needy class of French people—inaccessible because voiceless—the war-stricken gentle folk, or, as he calls them, the "Homeless Ladies of France"—S. Richard Fuller of Boston travels up and down the length and breadth of this country giving lectures on "France in the War," "England in the War," and "America in the War," devoting the money raised by voluntary subscriptions on these occasions to the succor of this large and increasingly indigent group of people.

Already ninety-four families have received aid from the Fullers, for Mrs. Fuller is as active in this work as her husband.

Some families are being entirely maintained by the Fullers. One of these assisted cases is a family of eight who formerly owned and lived in a fine home on the Somme. They were driven forth by the Germans, their house and belongings destroyed, and themselves scattered. Now for the first time, by the help of this American couple, this French family is reunited and half its living expenses are met from the fund raised by Mr. Fuller's delightful, scholarly, and inspiring talks. He gave one on "France in the War" at the house of Mrs. E. C. Dudley last Thursday evening. Tonight he speaks on "America in the War" at the residence of Mrs. Harry Shearson, 920 Lincoln parkway (or North Michigan avenue, as we must learn to call it).

Wright Collection Joy to Connoisseur

Such an alive, attractive, smart, and altogether up to date institution as the Arts club is these days it would be hard to find anywhere else. Frank Lloyd Wright's collection of Japanese prints is a thing of joy to the connoisseur and to the rank outsider a collection to wonder over. It starts the fancy traveling over land and sea and back through time. You study these prints, their finely detailed landscapes, their delicious snow scenes, their quaint houses, their high bred, exquisite women, their amazing birds, and of two things one becomes vaguely conscious—the incalculable power that is theirs and comes from their matchless self-control, and their, to us, utter inscrutability. To cast such light as we simple hearted occidentals have into the mind of the Japanese is to get a glimpse of a glittering, unfathomable blackness, a something we shall never understand.

Apropos of this, is the tale of a returned traveler from the land of the mikado. He remarked to a gentle Japanese that the people of Japan, who formerly, under soft Teutonic ministration, seemed to hate us thoroughly, now manifested for us great affection. "Ah, yes," said the gentle Japanese; "we love you very much now; you have such a big army." Put that down in your notebook.

Mr. Wright's collection, which is admirably hung and arranged, is now being reinforced by a famous Japanese dancer expressly imported from New York. This is Mme. Kimura, Dai Nippon's most famous dance artist, an enchanting young woman who looks as if she had stepped from the emperor's most beautiful screen. She danced last evening at the club and will do so again this afternoon. With her, to increase the utterly oriental or Asiatic atmosphere of the occasion, is Ratan Devi, a young woman who croons Hindoo and Persian folk songs in a soul stirring manner.

If you'd like for a couple of hours to get entirely away from the present atmosphere of surgical bandages, sweaters, and other war work, go into the Arts club at 3 o'clock today. You can wind up the orgy of colors, rhythm, and melody with a cup of tea and at the same time can see the interior of that chic little club.

They started last Tuesday under the guidance of the president, Mrs. Robert McGann, and Mrs. Joe Winterbotham, to have Italian luncheons at the Arts club, and delightful affairs they are. For 75 cents you can have, if you are a member, the most delectable raviogli, risotto alla Milanese, and spaghetti Napolitana, "vino compreso," you ever ate, served on lovely little green tables by an Italian steward.

Another innovation the Arts club proposes is to increase its active membership to include some fifteen musical composers. It seems that Chicago is rich in composers who have no forum to try out their compositions. The Arts club is planning to give them opportunities similar to those it offers artists. There will be musicals at which these local Debussys, Saint-Saëns, and Puccinis can give their compositions a hearing before music lovers. Arthur Bissell and John Carpenter are interested in working this scheme up.

The women who are most active in developing the Arts club's many possibilities are the Mesdames Robert McGann, John Carpenter, C. M. Ely, George Higginson, and Joseph Winterbotham.

See Abrahamson's Pictures

Speaking of matters artistic, yesterday afternoon Christian Abrahamson, a gifted young Norwegian painter, gave a small tea in his studio at 19 East Pearson street to afford a preliminary glance at his picture exhibit now on in this same studio. Mrs. Herman Gade poured tea for him, while his neighbor, Mrs. Cecil Clark Davis, who has an atelier in the same building, was general manager of the occasion, showman, hostess, and so forth. Among those who came were the Mesdames Medill McCormick, Julian Mason, John M. Clark, George Higginson, and Robert McGann.

That extremely attractive, magnetic young pianist, Mischa Levitzki, who recently had such instantaneous recognition at the symphony concerts, is playing at the Kinsolving musical next Tuesday morning in the Blackstone crystal ballroom. With him will be the delightful tenor, Theodore Karle, heard here last year. The net proceeds from these popular morning musicals will be donated by Miss Kinsolving to the Great Lakes auxiliary of the Navy Relief. Among the regular patrons of the musicals are the Mesdames Hugh McBirney, John Borden, Chauncey Keep, E. A. Leight, John J. Glessner, Stanley Field, J. Ogden Armour, Frederick W. Upham, and Miss Helen Birch.

Former Chicagoan Honored

Much water has flowed under the bridge since "Nat" Jones built the house in Bellevue place now owned and once occupied by the Harold McCormicks. Mr. Jones failed and died soon after his house was finished. His family scattered; one daughter, the charming Carrie Jones, married a French nobleman, the Count Benoist d'Azy, and went to live in Frence, where she has ever since made her home. She is now a widow, as attractive and handsome as ever, say those who know her there.

She has lately been the recipient of unusual honors that she won by heroic attendance on a group of wounded in the cellar of an ancient château which, lying just back of the battle line of the famous Chemin des Dames, was continuously under fire. She was, as the French put it, "cite à l'ordre de division," and decorated by the hands of the general of that part of the French fighting forces with the Croix de Guerre. To be cited in the orders of the day is a distinction given only to those who display unusual courage in extreme danger. The Croix de Guerre is an ornament more beautiful, more desirable, than the most splendid piece of jewelry ever designed by Cartier.

Exhausted and nearly a physical wreck from the bodily and mental strain, she returned to Paris in October to recuperate. Now, restored in health, she has gone back to the shattered soldiers in that shattered château and again taken up the work of caring for them.

Apropos of the French battle lines is the following story of Joffre's chauffeur. Newspaper men have been trying by every possible means to get Joffre's views as to the probable duration of the war. He himself is quite inaccessible to the journalistic fraternity, having the true soldier's dislike to newspaper notoriety. The news gatherers finally, with much glee, got hold of the French general's chauffeur and asked him the following set of questions:

"Does your master ever talk to you?"

"O, yes, he frequently rides on the front seat of the car with me and we always talk together."

"Does he talk about the war?"

"Yes, almost entirely."

"Does he ever talk to you about the end of the war and when this will come?"

"Indeed he does! It is only yesterday that he said to me: 'Jean, tell me, when do you think this horrible, wicked war will end?'"

Singers New to Chicago in Second Week of Opera.

Miss Genevieve Vix
Miss Anna Fitzziu

As Anna Fitzhugh, the Mme. Fitziu of Campanini's roster, was a figurante when, in 1902, "The Wizard of Oz" was Chicago's major reason for going to the theater. Not long thereafter she was, for a week or two, a star in operetta on Manhattan island. The ambition to sing in Something Higher soon took a hold on her and was pursued relentlessly until, several years ago, her name was in the sopranos' catalogue of the Metropolitan itself. She has not yet been heard in her new capacity in Chicago, where she will open tomorrow night in the season's first revival of Puccini's "Tosca"—an opera in which she seeks to challenge memories of Eames, Milka Ternina, Fremstad, Farrar, and Mary Garden herself. She is not without reasons, apparently; for in wiring Campanini last week to tell of her approach, she added:

"I have a letter signed by Polacco saying I am one of the best Toscas he has ever seen."

Mlle. Vix is from Paris, where she specializes in what are known in the United States as "Garden roles," although her debut, next Saturday afternoon, will be in Massenet's "Manon," not an opera with which Miss Garden is associated in the American mind. The newcomer has been singing in Spain with, judging by the press clippings she has mailed, wondrous success. The predominance of Italian pieces in the repertoire last week and this is due to Mlle. Vix's belated coming. She was to have been vis-a-vis with Muratore, in the original scheme for the first week, on Tuesday night.

The big bazaar which will be given during this week for the benefit of St. Mary's mission will open tomorrow morning in the Elizabethan room of the Congress hotel. Many prominent society women will sell Christmas novelties and practical articles at the various booths, and Mrs. Carter H. Harrison and Mrs. Vincent Walsh will "keep store" in the little place which will represent a country store, with all sorts of funny things to sell. Mrs. Edward I. Cudahy will be in charge of the dolls' booth. Mrs. Frank E. Wilhelm will have an elaborately fitted up automobile shop, and Mrs. Edward B. Healy will sell candy. Mrs. W. J. Black will be in charge of the art booth, and in the oriental section, which has been fitted out with rare treasures from the collection of Mrs. John Cudahy, there will be other society women.

Miss Sylvia Shaw

The debutantes of this year and last are not sitting down in futile sadness because there are to be few dances and little gaiety this season. Instead they are, as far as they are able, taking their share of the fight, which is good, sturdy backing of the work their brothers and friends are doing in camp and at the front. Miss Sylvia Shaw, who was one of the most popular of last season's society buds, is devoting herself to increasing the money coming in for the great Y. M. C. A. drive being made in this country. Miss Shaw and a number of her friends are planning a chain of benefit bridge parties, at each of which the players contribute $1 each.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Bruegger of 1315 Hyde Park boulevard, will give a tea this afternoon at their residence for the members of the Players' workshop.

A lecture on Japanese prints will be given on Thursday afternoon at the Arts club at 3 o'clock by Frank Lloyd Wright, whose prints are now hanging on the walls of the clubrooms where he himself took charge of changing the entire decorative scheme of the club in order to afford an appropriate setting for the prints. Mrs. Robert G. McGann, president of the club, will preside at the lecture.

A bazaar will be held this week beginning today, in the new assembly hall of St. Edmund's school, Oak Park, for the benefit of the building fund of the school. Members of St. Edmund's parish, Oak Park, will be in charge of the bazaar. Miss Audrey Mills will have charge of the children's booth.

The annual benefit of the Service club which has in former years been amateur theatricals, will this year be a benefit performance of "Come Out of the Kitchen," at Powers' theater, to take place on Tuesday evening.

A benefit ball will be given on Wednesday evening at the Edgewater Beach hotel under the direction of the Homemakers' guild, the proceeds of which will go to the dependent families of soldiers. Mrs. George W. Davis is general chairman and will have as her assistants Mrs. Marshall A. Roe, Mrs. T. Vernette Morse, and others.

South Shore Country club admirers of Edwin Markham will have an opportunity to meet him this evening when he will be a guest of the club and read from his own works. Dinner parties will be many during the week, with many members entertaining before the Thursday and Saturday dances and in connection with the bridge tournament on Monday and Friday.

A pageant, written by Mrs. Ella W. Peattie and to be directed by Mrs. George B. Carpenter, will be given on the afternoons of Dec. 4 and 6 by members of the Chicago Woman's club. The pageant, entitled "Times and Manners," will be dramatized in ten groups representing periods from the time of the early Greeks until the present day. Mrs. Elsa Durand Mower is in charge of the grouping and staging; Mrs. Lou Wall Moore is training the dancers; Mrs. Bertha S. Pfaff will arrange the final patriotic group, and Miss Elizabeth Telling has designed the costumes. There will be more than 100 participants in the pageant, who will be members of the club and their daughters and friends. The prologue will be presented by Mrs. Guy Goddard, Mrs. Alexander F. Stevenson Jr., and Miss Louise Redfield. The net proceeds from the performances are to benefit the Red Cross fund of the club.

Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the president, has offered the use of her name as a patroness for the coming song recital to be given under society's auspices in the gold ballroom of the Congress hotel on the afternoon of Nov. 27 by Vladimir Resnikoff, a young Russian baritone. Resnikoff, who has appeared in many private homes in New York and in numerous recital halls, is especially liked by music lovers in his interpretations of Russian folk music. He also sings many of the famous old classics. Mrs. Edward A. Leight heads the list of patronesses and is working hard to help the affair toward success. As an added feature there will be a ballet divertissement given by several young girls under the direction of Mme. Marie Yung and proceeds will go to several of the war relief funds, including the take place Tuesday evening.

Thanksgiving season will be almost as festive as the holiday season, as the social calendar looks at present. There will be a gala benefit ball at the Great Lakes Naval Training station on Thanksgiving eve, with Mrs. William A. Moffett, wife of the commandant, in charge of arrangements. Those who will be patronesses for the ball are Mrs. J. Ogden Armour, Mrs. J. J. Mitchell, Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen, Mrs. Frederick D. Countiss, Mrs. William J. Chalmers, Mrs. Frank Hibbard, Mrs. Laurance H. Armour, Mrs. C. C. Adsit, Mrs. Ford Rodman Carter, Mrs. Ida J. Couch, Mrs. Charles S. Dewey, and Mrs. Kenneth Sawyer Goodman. The public is invited.

The alumnæ of the Woodlawn Loretto academy will give a benefit card party on Tuesday evening, Dec. 11, at the Hayes hotel, Dorchester avenue and East Sixty-fourth street. The proceeds will be given to charity. Those in charge are Miss Florence Fox, Miss Loretto Burke, Miss Helen Lunney, and Miss Besse Dailey.

Members of the Brownleigh are asked to be responsible for jackies from the Great Lakes station who will be guests at a Thanksgiving dinner to be given at the club on Thanksgiving day. Those who will be responsible for one or more guests are asked to give their names by tomorrow. A "sweetless day" has been appointed by the club members, the saving from which will be used for buying candles and cakes for the soldiers and sailors. Dr. Julia Holmes Smith and Miss Jean Hill are back of the plan for the Thanksgiving dinner.

A benefit performance of "Have a Heart" will be given at the Illinois theater on Tuesday evening, Dec. 4, by the members of the Kenwood Social Service club, of which Miss Helen Warren of 4312 Oakenwald avenue is president. Miss Ruth Dugan is chairman of the ticket committee and others assisting are Miss Marion Boisot, Miss Margaret Marston, Miss Florence Bradley, and Miss Margaret Moore. The proceeds will go toward the support of the infant welfare station at the Providence Day nursery, Gratten and West Thirty-first streets.

The Women of the Empire State society will give a breakfast at the Hotel Morrison on Thursday at 12:30 o'clock, to be followed by cards at 2 o'clock.

A Christmas sale for the benefit of St. Bernard's Roman Catholic church will be held in the church hall at Sixty-sixth street and Stewart avenue tomorrow and on the following three days. A literary and musical program will be given each evening and a dinner will be served on Thursday evening.

A concert will be given on Friday evening at the Old People's home, Forty-seventh street and Vincennes avenue, by the Benevolent Music association. The affair is for the benefit of the Old People's home.

"What wizardry that can carry vision to the fields of France; can paint the scene—the ancient abbey, the group of brave young hearts; nay! even more, can summon his very presence"

THE MAGIC OF MUSIC

"INEXPRESSIBLE, the comfort my Vocalion is to me during these lonesome evening hours!

"By day I am busy, and in a tiny way, I hope, helpful. But the evening—the time which seems to belong to him, would be almost unendurable were it not for the solace that the music of the Vocalion brings to me.

"After he had been gone a few weeks, a letter came from 'somewhere in France' which told me of his evenings—

"and we made up a very tolerable quartette, with a burr and a brogue, a drawl and I suppose a twang from yours truly. The boys seem to prefer the old songs —'Sweet and Low' is, I think, the general favorite."

"Nothing, not even his letters, seems to bring him so close to me as to sit down with the Vocalion and play this dear old song.

"As softly, with tones that are real and beautiful, the Vocalion begins to play, I draw out this wonderful expression control, the Graduola, until the full, virile voices come to me softened to tenderest pianissimo—

"Sweet and low, sweet and low
Wind of the Western sea—

"Then I press the Graduola gently and the lovely old melody sweeps out more and more broadly with (to me) Billy's rich baritone clearly discernible:

"Over the rolling waters go
Come from the dying moon and blow
Blow him again to me—

"Now I draw out the Graduola again, and slowly the music floats away to its tender, soothing close—

"While my little one, while my pretty one, sleeps.—

"What wondrous wizardry is this, that in the quiet of the lonely evening can carry vision across the weary miles of tossing ocean to the fields of France; can paint the scene —the ancient abbey, the group of brave young hearts; nay! even more, can summon his very presence?"

This wizardry is the magic of music—that gift to man which above all others stirs the soul—inspires, consoles and remakes memories to living realities again!

It is the magic of music's eloquent hand-servant—the phonograph—that wonderful interpreter which knows and voices all her thousand tongues!

It is the magic of the phonograph's new art—emotional response—which makes the phonograph truly an instrument of personal expression.

THE AEOLIAN-VOCALION is the phonograph personalized, refined and made still better. Its richness, beauty, clarity of tone—its marvelous ability to revivify distinctive instruments and voices—its great appealing new feature, the Graduola, for controlling expression, bespeak the stride it marks in phonograph development.

NEWS OF THE CHICAGO WOMEN'S CLUBS.

Women Report Result of Half Year's War Work

IN the chancelleries of the allies coöperation is now the watchword, but the women of Illinois appreciated its value more than six months ago and have made coöperation and coördination of all forms of women's work a living, growing entity.

Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen's report of the work accomplished during its first gardens. Its emphasis is placed upon mittee, C. N. D., Illinois division, has just been forwarded to Washington. It not only is a record giving the wide range of activities possible to the trained and untrained, paid and volunteer women workers of the state, but it has provided machinery for intelligent distribution of information and for calls of all kinds for woman's service. It will also serve to standardize the local units and bring them within the reach of the helping hands of the twelve departments.

Mrs. Bowen foresees limitless possibilities in this woman's census. She says: "As the problems of peace as well as those of war may be met by means of this organization, it should prove to be an institution of permanent value as a clearing house of women's activities when the war is ended."

The department of food production does not rest on the encouraging results of its last spring's campaign in increased acreage under cultivation and large returns from small vegetable six months of life by the woman's com- the prospective plans for next season's campaign. In coöperation with the men's committees plans are being made which will provide expert supervision of food, fuel, and conservation in every county in the state.

The activities of the women members of these committees will be especially directed toward the increase of food gardens. Other allied work which will naturally fall within the province of the women workers and will be under their supervision, are the raising of poultry and cultivation of small fruit. In view of the shortage of sugar special emphasis will be laid upon the vital importance of bee culture.

The time is long past when the will to serve was sufficient indorsement for offers of patriotic service. Only trained patriots will have great opportunities in the nation's forces. Lists of subjects offered for special training in bewildering variety await the choice of the woman worker. Two editions of a bulletin containing a comprehensive variety of classes available in Chicago have already been issued by the department of courses of instruction, and a survey of every town in the state is being tabulated so that information of a similar kind may be available in every locality.

If the experience of other warring countries is repeated in the United States, the department of women and children in industry has a vital rôle to play. In anticipation of much service, foundation lines have been laid in many directions where assistance will be needed to maintain industrial standards already established. Readjustment designed to deal with the question of loss of employment incident to the transition from peace to war footing has already engaged the expert service of this department. The problem of the foreign born woman has resulted in the establishment of interesting and successful classes in the teaching of English and incidentally has accomplished a fine work in the development of Americanism among foreign born women wage-earners.

Intensive coöperation is the watchword of the department of health and recreation. The lists of interrelated organizations working in the common cause has greatly advanced the results of effort expended. In addition to moral educational training this department has also demonstrated its usefulness in promoting high patriotic ideals among young girls.

The department of social welfare maintains itself as a clearing house for all social service agencies. It has found great opportunity in training and placing volunteer workers who are able to supplement the work of the regular staff whom the various charitable organizations are still able to employ.

The information department serves always as the link connecting and correlating the work of all departments.

Mrs Arnold Chapman — Mrs Joseph T Bowen

Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen is chairman of the woman's committee of the Council of National Defense, Illinois division. Her report of the work accomplished during the first six months of its life has just been forwarded to Washington.

On Saturday two programs of musical and dramatic numbers will be presented, under the direction of Mrs. Letitia Kempster Barnum, in the assembly hall of the Chicago School of Expression and Dramatic Art, 633 Fine Arts building. The entire proceeds will go to buy necessities and comforts for soldiers—half to go to boys in American army and half to those Americans who enlisted with Canadian forces before war was declared by the United States. Contributions of both money and packages will be received at the door. Mrs. Arnold Chapman is among the women working for the success of the affair.

WOMEN IN WAR WORK.

The Stage Women's War Relief, organized by Mrs. Otis Skinner, meets regularly on the top floor of the Illinois theater.

The Seventy-fifth army district has an organization called the Comfort and Aid association. The purposes are to provide the boys from that district with comforts and small luxuries. William B. Owen of the Normal school is president, John B. Devine is vice president, George B. Ingersoll is treasurer, and Mrs. George S. Haskell is secretary. Numerous knitting clubs have been organized in the district, and plans are being perfected toward having a permanent workshop for the district workers.

Active coöperation between Masons and their sisters of the Eastern Star is expected to be the result of a series of conferences on the subject of war relief work for the members of the women's Masonic order. Several hundred members of the Eastern Star have adopted resolutions authorizing the worthy grand matron, Mrs. Sadie R. McBride of Peoria, to go ahead with plans for enlisting the members of the order for war service.

The Homemakers' guild has established a conservation bureau for the purpose of conserving all things necessary to the highest developed form of civilization, including food. The headquarters are at 155 North Clark street.

A Red Cross unit has been established at the rooms of the League for the Hard of Hearing, 101 Auditorium building. Wool is furnished by the Red Cross and many knitted articles are being turned in.

Six ways to conserve sugar have been printed by the conservation department of the woman's committee, and have received the enthusiastic indorsement of Harry A. Wheeler, who is going to keep copies of the methods in his office for distribution. Here they are:

"The oversweetening of beverages is a needless use of sugar, and it is often found undissolved in the bottom of the cup: One cube or one teaspoon of sugar should be sufficient for tea or coffee.

"Use more fruits, both fresh and dried, in the place of sweet puddings and substitute salads for desserts.

"Do not use sugar on cereals, but try serving dates, figs, and raisins with them.

"Do not frost cakes; this is an unnecessary use of sugar. Give preference to cakes which may be sweetened by molasses and sirup.

"Confectionery made of granulated sugar should not be used at this critical time. Use glucose, corn sirup, and maple sugar in home made candies.

"This is the emergency for which you prepared your fruits and preserves last summer."

Woman's Aid Busy in Many Branches of Civic Service

THE work of the Chicago Woman's Aid for this season really began last spring. At that time, in order to centralize the war work of the organization, a committee on woman's service was appointed in addition to the regular committees of the club.

The first activity of this new group was the creation of a Red Cross auxiliary, which has since become independent and is doing record breaking work. Since June 15 it has turned in 5,270 completed articles, contributed $1,550 to the Red Cross, and conducted a social service branch with twelve members working as volunteers in the home service department of the Red Cross.

The woman's service committee has made a practice of delegating all war work to already existing committees wherever possible. So far it has undertaken only two distinct pieces of work—registration and conservation. More than fifty trained registrars, supplied by the committee, worked during registration week in the First, Third, Sixth, and Twentieth wards.

A notable piece of conservation work was done last summer by the establishment of a class in war time cooking at the Smyth school. This class is to be continued in connection with the school social center this winter.

Practically all the work of the Chicago Woman's Aid is done through its three departments—arts and literature, education, and civics and philanthropy. The arts and literature department, as a part of its war work, is planning a program to be given at the Great Lakes Naval Training station on Jan. 17. Art study classes are now being held on alternate Fridays at the Art institute.

In the spring this department coöperated with the City Gardens association and secured garden plots for seven families referred by the Jewish Aid society.

The educational department is, as usual, conducting a study class under the direction of Dr. Emil G. Hirsch. The subject for the year is "The Genius of Nations." There are also the regular monthly tours of notable educational institutions.

This department is bending all its energies toward the improvement of local school administration. All meetings of the board of education are attended by a committee. At present a vigorous protest is being made against the policy of making social centers the first victims of the coal shortage. For the last six years the club has maintained a successful afternoon center at the John Smyth school, with an average attendance of 200 children and forty foreign mothers.

The civics and philanthropy department has thirteen active committees working on such problems as public comfort stations, bathing beaches, playgrounds, public school buildings, suffrage, food, and city waste. This last group is now concentrating its efforts on a cleanup campaign in one of the congested districts.

This winter the club will conduct a series of study classes on "Civic Problems Intensified by the War," the first class to be held on Nov. 28 under the direction of Harry A. Wheeler, local food administrator.

The housing committee has long held a prominent place in housing reform work, and with the aid and inspiration of Chief Sanitary Inspector Ball, is doing effective work in educating the public to demand proper housing, in urging good housing legislation, and in enforcing existing laws.

The woman's aid is at present contributing financially to twenty-five organizations doing civic, educational, and philanthropic work, and is temporarily paying the salary of a trained dietitian working under the auspices of the west side dispensary. Similarly, in years past the club paid the salaries of a social service nurse for the west side dispensary and a vocational director for the board of education until their value was proved and the expense taken over by their respective organizations.

DOWNTOWN CLUBS.

At the meeting of the Daughters of the Renaissance on Tuesday at 2 p. m. at the Art institute Mrs. Herman J. Hall will address the club on "The Romantic School of French."

The L. C. B. A. Social club will give a card party at the Hotel Sherman on Friday evening. The proceeds will be donated to the Catholic Social center.

The Chicago Woman's club is to present a pageant of "Times and Manners" on the afternoons of Dec. 4 and 6 in the Studebaker theater. The poem, written by Mrs. Elia W. Peattie, is to be staged with the assistance of Mrs. Elsa Durand Mower, Mrs. Lou Wall Moore, Miss Elizabeth Telling, and Mrs. Bertha S. Pfaff. The net proceeds of the presentation are to be donated to the Red Cross fund. Mrs. George B. Carpenter is chairman.

Opera and Horses Compete for Favor of Smart World

By Mme. Y.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Yes, smart society has heard the slogan. It assembled en masse for the first time this season last Monday evening, and gave us opportunity to observe just how far it is altered in attitude by our national call to arms. At the opera and the horse show one saw evidences that it is answering the summons. In costuming it was far from gay. Knitting needles flashed in place of the tiaras of other days.

In attitude it is serious. Conversation between boxes dealt not with the doings of themselves and neighbors, but with the vast movements of armies. And when personal touches did force themselves on the attention they were instances grounded in the national situation, such as these:

It became known that Mrs. George Henry Warren did not attend the opening performance of the Metropolitan opera because she was ill, and that just before Mr. Warren left his home to be present word came that the son of these two, George Henry Warren Jr., of the One Hundred and Sixty-fifth infantry, had arrived safely in France. Everybody was congratulating Mr. and Mrs. Orme Wilson on having two sons in Washington who expect soon to enter the war service of the government.

There was a tenseness in every manner and face.

Patriotism at the Opera.

Demonstrations and decorations graced the two great social occasions that have never been a part of these assemblies before. Over at the horse show the big decoration of the evening was a great red cross of light over the doorway. At the opera between the second and the third acts Mr. Caruso and principals sing our national anthem, which begins with, "O, say." Caruso had to keep his notes in front of him—his notes, that is, of the words, for he could carry even this tune in his head—and he gave the anthems well as the audience the surprise of a lifetime by introducing without warning into our simple national melody a high B flat, with which he came out on top of principals and chorus near the end of the song. He carried the American flag and the symbols of all the allied nations waved on the stage. It was a great display of patriotism and art that took place on that wonderful occasion, and it gave opportunity withal for my ever recurring exclamation of "O, time and change!"

So many of the old patrons were not there. They were dead. They were sick. They were saddened by war and all of the other chastening influences of this mortal life. It was sad—was that scene at the opening of the opera—and it was gay. One little item deserves a paragraph unornamented and unexplained. Mrs. Vanderbilt was not there. Nobody seems to know why, and everybody was merely commenting that it was her first absence in years—some said in the memory of the opera—on an opening night.

The Question of the Evening.

By this, however, I do not wish to imply that the opera was less of a social occasion than in other years. Practically everybody that is anybody was there. And as for the costuming, I do not wish to encroach on the brilliantly conducted department of my friend and confrere, K'Rin Lowe, but who could resist an occasional costume out of a galaxy so beautiful, or, rather, who could refrain from a generalization on the large subject of style? To describe one of these costumes is beyond the scope of this unworthy typewriter.

As a leading generalization, the question of the evening came to be not the accustomed one of whether or not Caruso was losing his voice, but whether or not the evening dresses would remain in place, and if so what kept them there. Close investigation disclosed the reassuring fact that they were, comparatively speaking, secure, moored, as they were, at the shoulders with almost invisible sleeves of tulle, that left off before they reached the elbows.

As a second generalization the tulle scarf of other seasons is gone, and white gloves, for a period defunct, have come to life. They also leave off near the elbow, with the result that the plumpest part of the debutante's arm is offered in view. Large fans of ostrich feathers match the costume.

Colorful Gowns Worn.

There is a new copper color come to town. Some people call it neutral orange and some bronze yellow, and whatever the name of it the color is pretty indeed. It shared popularity on the opening night and throughout the week with amethyst, crimson, bright green, and soldier blue. Chiffon velvet is a popular fabric. Fishlike trains are in vogue. Silhouettes are slender.

A beautiful harmony in color was presented in the box which held the party consisting, on the feminine side, of Mrs. John Purroy Mitchel, wife of the mayor; Mrs. Otto Kahn and Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson. Mrs. Mitchel's gown was of blue and she carried a fan of Russian blue plumes. Mrs. Kahn's costume was of amethyst velvet, cut into a deep V and with short sleeves. From her left shoulder was draped a military cord of dull gold. Her corsage was filled in with fine lace.

Mrs. Jay Gould was dressed in white satin, which was held in place by diagonal strands of brilliants, crossing her neck and shoulders. She carried a large white feather fan.

I don't know whether it is an unfortunate custom of ours to have our two big social occasions of the early winter come on the same night. The way patrons of both get round the difficulty is to go to the horse show in the afternoon. Mrs. Arthur Scott Burden, gowned in a tailored suit of rich brown garnished lavishly with fur, acted as manager and hostess at the afternoon session of the horse show. She is the chairman of the committee of society interested in the show because of its connection with the Red Cross.

Mrs. Henry Payne Whitney wore a pale green gown interwoven with silver. Mrs. Payne Whitney was gowned in ivory white brocade and tulle. Miss Flora Payne Whitney's white satin gown made a picture of her. The white satin wide band that

(Modart Corsets insure continuous figure improvement)

The "better dressed" woman is selecting a Modart Front Laced Corset this season. As in the past, her purchase is made with more pleasure than any other article of her wearing apparel.

The event with her is far more than the mere purchase of a corset. It is a sound investment in figure improvement.

All Modart Corsets are designed and sold on a basis of the figure improving service they render. To sell corsets simply as corsets has never been our purpose.

The hundreds of thousands of women who wear Modart Corsets know this. They buy the Modart because of this service. Experience has demonstrated to them that each Modart worn continues to improve the figure. This improvement is constantly maintained, for the corset is designed to hold its shape until worn out. Modart wearers remain Modart wearers year after year.

To create and fix such service in a corset, the very highest designing skill is employed. As a consequence the finest materials and the best workmanship possible must be used. These are reasons why Modart values are always unusual and why women willingly pay $3.75 and up for this superior corset.

Leading stores nearly everywhere throughout the United States and Canada sell Modart Corsets. They join us in inviting you to make the "Test of Tests"—a Trial Fitting. Their corsetières will render this service without obligation on your part to purchase. When you have made the test, we believe you will not care to be without a Modart.

Do not hesitate to ask for your Trial Fitting. It will be gladly given you by experienced corsetières who thoroughly understand the Modart idea and will advise you how to wear your Modart so you will get the utmost out of its wonderful figure improving qualities.

Modart Corsets are Always Front-Laced. Pioneers in the Front Lacing idea, we design Front-Laced Corsets only, because our experience has proved to us that Front Lacing is the correct idea in corseting and that the properly designed Front-Laced corset offers greater opportunities for visible figure improvement than any other type.

A War-Time Message from a Chicago Art Dealer
History of Development of Famous Young Plan of Selling Pictures.

THE season of 1917-18 promises to be a trying one for the American artist. The safety of free institutions throughout the world is in jeopardy. Our nation, the home of millions who either themselves came here or are the descendants of those who came here in order that they might enjoy the blessings of democracy, has come to a full realization that this is a war of autocracy against democracy. Democracy and autocracy cannot live together as neighbors in the brotherhood of nations. Democracy must not step backward—must not perish. Hence our country, the greatest of democracies, is forced into this world war.

Already with noblest impulse, in the first half year, as a freedom-loving people, we have marshalled millions of the most vigorous of our manhood, making them ready for the conflict. We have given billions to equip and sustain this army and that of our allies. Millions more have been sent to give aid to those helpless victims who have been crushed and ruined, who are now wanderers—to whom the world is a blank.

This noble response to the call of the torn millions of Europe must make us beloved of all nations for all time. The civilization of the world must turn to us for a correct example of future conduct for their guidance in the hard years to come.

We are giving so generously of our store that we ourselves find scarcity of food and necessities. It is written that "man does not live by bread alone." Civilization demands other things than those which sustain mere animal existence. It demands a lofty ideal to follow as its "cloud by day and its pillar of fire by night."

This means that those among us who are holding aloft the beacon lights of our civilization must be sustained as well as he who follows the plow, delves in mine or toils in mill; or else the rest of us, lacking that light, shall be in darkness. He who leads with the torch cannot have his hands free to do the toil of the many who follow, and if his hand fails—darkness—and all is lost.

Art Encouragement Needed in War Time

We have many men with minds filled with noblest conceptions of great beauty. They have spent years training themselves to express that beauty so that the rest of us not so gifted might be uplifted when we view their work. We are the only nation left on earth that has an art worth while that is yet far enough removed from the shock of war not to feel its blight on its art.

It must devolve upon us to keep alive an art so worthy as ours. Art cannot be fed from an empty spoon; you must buy an artist's work or usually he cannot live and produce.

In times like these, when we are all taught to practice economy, many say "Art is a luxury in which I must not indulge, now." What pound foolishness and penny wisdom! These artists of ours are the leaders of the rest of us, so blinded to beauty which we would never see but for them.

Many of our painters are now "over there." Many more are in training camps. Some of our most talented are unfit for military service and have families to support. They are very apt to be overlooked. It is as truly patriotic to buy the pictures of our worthy native artists now as it is to lend unstinted support to the great cause for which we wage this war. Both have the same end in view—giving life to a higher form of civilization.

This may seem like quite a sermon from an art dealer, but those who know me know I am deadly in earnest. They know I have always stood for our own American artist and his work. They know I have always tried to conduct my business so fairly that none need fear to buy, even if they felt they lacked expert knowledge.

Reason for Young Plan and Its History

For a long time I have felt that there were so many who loved pictures, yet did not buy them because they did not know artists from whom they might purchase direct; and did not like to buy from art dealers because they felt that dealers take such very large profits.

It seemed to me that if pictures could be offered in some way so that buyers could have ample chance to study them and make offers such as they were willing to pay and allow others to then make a higher offer, it would stimulate picture buying. A great many pictures are sold at public auction, but sometimes bidders are afraid that works offered in this way are secretly "bid in" for the seller unless they bring a price the seller desires.

After months of thought and study I held my first sale of about one hundred pictures by the plan I had worked out. The pictures all sold, but at such low prices that I lost several thousand dollars that I could ill afford to lose at that time. I noticed that the best pictures in the sale brought the fairest prices, and I concluded to try again with a better lot of pictures. I lost a little money this time.

I made improvements in the plan, studied better methods of advertising and offered much better pictures in my third sale and made a profit. The reason is no secret. I offered fine paintings, stated a price for them in my catalog that was a fair market price; offered them at this price for the first week of my sale, but allowed customers to make bids as low as 5% of the catalog price or bids of some multiple of 5% of the catalog price. The amount bid on a work was posted on the picture so all could see. This first bid stood until a higher bid was made and posted on the picture. These bids were recorded in a book with the name and address of all bidders. This book was open to any bidder so he could always know who had overbid him.

After the first week of the sale, the price on each picture was reduced 5% daily. Since bids were made in multiples of 5% and the prices were reduced 5% daily, it is evident that eventually the price of each picture would be reduced until it met the amount that some one had bid, and on that day that picture was sold to the one who had made the highest bid.

The fairness of this plan appealed both to picture buyers and a large number of artists who were looking for a fair market.

I always buy for cash. Some artists have sufficient confidence in the appeal their pictures make to entrust them to these sales on a commission basis.

Out-of-Town Patronage Developed

It was during my third sale that patrons from a distance began to send me bids by mail on pictures they had never seen. I was almost afraid to accept these bids, as I feared customers might be disappointed when they received the works on which they had successfully bid. But they were so well pleased that I made plans to care for this patronage, and in my last April sale over one-third of the pictures offered went to out-of-town patrons who made bids on pictures they never saw and paid for them before shipment. I offered to refund money to any who bought "sight unseen" if dissatisfied. Only in one instance did I find a customer who expressed dissatisfaction. Immediately his check was returned, and in a few days while on a visit to Chicago he bought several paintings from the gallery.

Many old friends of our galleries will read this who have already received a catalog of this sale. You will readily see that this is by far the most important collection we have ever offered. We know we will have your bids early and hope you will interest your friends in our sale.

Some of my friends tell me that I am risking much in offering nearly thirty thousand dollars' worth of pictures in this way in war times. But now at the approach of the holiday season I feel persuaded that a country such as ours, filled with picture-loving people, a country that oversubscribed the Liberty Loan by nearly two billions, who in her strength is meeting every fair call, will respond to this sale, in which I am offering such a large number of important pictures by some of our most prominent artists.

I fully realize that now more than ever, when the public mind is so much taken up by other matters, that it is very essential that an art dealer, to be successful, must offer nothing but the best, so I am opening this sale with the fullest confidence and belief that the love for art in our country has not been entirely killed by this war, and I truly hope that I will be able to meet with such a liberal response that I will be encouraged to go forth at the beginning of the new year and collect from worthy artists who need patronage, a still greater collection and offer it to you.

It seems to me that now more than ever every picture dealer in the country must be big enough and brave enough to forget about profit-taking and do his "bit" fearlessly, so that an art as virile as ours may not be destroyed in our country, your country and mine.

The greatest bargains in these sales are always secured by the early bidders. Our old patrons know this and will be there early. This advice is to new patrons so they may have an even chance to come early and make the low bids on their favorite pictures.

Disciples Open a New Church in Morgan Park

By the Rev. W. B. Norton.

THE Morgan Park Church of Christ (Disciples), Homewood and Prospect avenues, will be dedicated today. The Rev. C. G. Kindred, pastor of the Englewood Christian church, under whose patronage the Morgan Park church was organized and established, will preach the dedicatory sermon at 11 o'clock. The dedication ceremony will be at 3 o'clock with greetings from neighboring pastors and an evangelistic service will be held at 7:30 o'clock. The Rev. Ben C. Crow is pastor.

The church was organized four years ago and services were held in Blake hall of the Morgan Park Military academy and in the Bank hall of Morgan Park. Kirby Page, now secretary of George Sherwood Eddy of the international Y. M. C. A., was pastor previous to the coming of Mr. Crow.

The new church, which has cost $15,000, was formerly the Morgan Park Methodist Episcopal church, and occupies the same site, but it has been remodeled, enlarged, and finished in stucco, whereas the old church was simply a frame structure. The Methodist congregation moved to a new site.

The adult Bible classes of Chicago will hold a joint rally at 2:30 o'clock today at the New First Congregational church, Ashland and Washington boulevards. Al Saunders, Billy Sunday's star "trail hitter" at the Scranton (Pa.) meeting, will be the speaker. The goal set for the adult Bible class movement in Chicago is 40,000.

The ordination of John Adamczyk, the first Polish Baptist minister ever ordained in Chicago, will take place at the Polish church, 1410 Augusta street, today at 3 o'clock. Those taking part will be the Rev. K. W. Strzelec, Milwaukee; the Rev. J. A. White, Messiah church; Prof. Joseph Rzepcki, National Slavic Baptist Training school, and the Rev. J. W. Merrill, South Chicago church.

Thomas J. Marx, for sixteen years in the Pacific Garden mission, began work last Wdnesday evening in connection with the Bible Rescue mission, 626 West Madison street, of which Charles Langsman is superintendent. Mr. Marx will lead services in the various churches, assisted by men who have been rescued in the mission. He gives his service without cost to the mission.

The Chicago Baptist Social union will hold a banquet Tuesday evening at the Hotel Morrison. The Rev. Edgar Y. Mullins, president of the Southern Baptist Theological seminary, Louisville, Ky., will speak on the subject, "The Christian View of the Great War."

Men of the First Methodist Episcopal church, Oak Park, met last Thursday at the Traffic club, Chicago, and organized a men's club. A. F. Elkins was elected president and E. B. Schmidt secretary.

The Rev. Frank Erwin Brandt

The Rev. Frank Edwin Brandt, for the last seven years rector of the Trinity Protestant Episcopal church, Aurora, Ill., is the new rector of St. Martin's church, Midway park and Waller avenue, Austin. He will preach his first sermon today.

Mr. Brandt is a graduate of the Western Theological seminary of Chicago and served as his first charge after his ordination in 1899 St. Augustine's church, Wilmette.

Before entering upon the ministry he was city editor of the Daily Republican, now the Republican-News, of Hamilton, O. He was also connected for a time with the Cincinnati Inquirer, Times-Star, and Post. He also took the law course in the college of law of Cornell university, Ithaca, N. Y.

He is a member of the University club of Chicago, a thirty-second degree Mason, a life member of the Elks, and an Oddfellow.

He is secretary of the diocesan board of missions and secretary of the board of trustees of Waterman Hall School for Girls at Sycamore. He was a delegate to the general convention of the church in 1913. He was one of the incorporators of the Juvenile Protective association of Aurora, a member of the board of directors and the treasurer of the association from its organization.

The Pilgrim Congregational church, Sixty-fourth street and Harvard avenue, will observe today as home coming day. The Rev. H. Samuel Fritsch, the pastor, will preach. In the evening J. Frank Hanley of Indianapolis will speak in the Englewood Presbyterian church, Yale avenue and Sixty-fourth street, in which the Pilgrim church will join.

The Chicago Congregational club will hold a banquet tomorrow evening at the Hotel La Salle. Frederic C. Howe, commissioner of immigration, will speak on the subject, "After the War—What?"

Service and The Corset

Third Floor—Center

The woman who takes advantage of our incomparable fitting service will appreciate her corset more than ever before, because we know how to fit her comfortably and bring out the best lines of her figure. If one of our expert corsetieres fits you, you'll then understand how much your corset has to do with your success with clothes, your health and your comfort, and so we say, why buy a corset without having it properly fitted here, especially so when the services of our expert corsetieres, considered the very best in all Chicago, are at your command without a penny to pay? Tomorrow we feature Warner corsets, which reflect "everything that is latest" in corseting in various models, with low, medium and high busts for all types of figures.

Warner corset, as illustrated, for the average figure who needs a firm, pliable corset, needs a corset more for support than to control, wants it to fit snugly about the abdomen, but has no undue amount of flesh in limbs, made of soft flesh color brocade pliably boned, six hose supporters, sizes 20 to 30, tomorrow at....... $4

Warner corsets for the rather full figure that wants to be comfortable but needs the figure confined and shaped to wear the new gowns; the bust is medium with curve under arm at waistline. The skirt, while retaining its softness, will control and reshape large limbs, because it has an invisible layer of batiste from the waistline down, giving it strength to hold superfluous flesh without stretching; all sizes up to 36; at.... $3

Warner corset—topless style, for debutante and others who do not want control above the waistline—elastic band around top, so shaped that it will not bind; sizes 19 to 28; at.......... $2

Warner Corsets in All Styles at $2 to $5

Warner junior corsets for girls, 13 to 18 years, at 1.25, 1.50 and 2.00.

The Very Next Time Your Children Need Shoes

Fourth Floor—State Street

You should see to it that they are fitted to Billiken shoes. The reasons are many, and each is as important as the other. Billiken shoes are made over the exclusive Billiken foot form lasts, the most scientifically designed lasts in all America, the only lasts that allow the child's foot to develop exactly as nature intended, fit snugly, comfortably, yet allow all the freedom the foot should have. Of course you know that a shoe too large is almost as much to blame for foot troubles as a shoe that is too small. If you see to it that the children wear Billiken shoes, you may depend upon it that you'll hear of no foot troubles in the future. They're made of soft, pliable calfskins, patent leathers and kidskins with genuine Flintstone oak soles.

Billiken Shoes

ART

Vivid and Varied Visions of War in Bouchor Paintings

IN the French room of the Blackstone hotel on the art floor there is a collection of war paintings by J. P. Bouchor, official painter of the French armies. With a delightful absence of sensationalism in any phase the pictures show at what close range the artist studied his themes. Close to the firing line at Verdun, at Ypres, in Champagne, in Flanders, on the Somme, and in the Vosges, he gives us every day incidents of life in the trenches, in the camps, and in the communication lines back of the front. Besides these he has a most interesting series of portraits of Gen. Sarrail, Gen. Pershing, of Foch and Castelnau and Joffre.

There is the picture of the Cathedral of Rheims, the church of kings, bearing on its still upright exterior the havoc of the enemy's making, while nearby hangs the picture of a road guard or solitary duty in front of Rheims on the road to Paris. Plenty of action is in the canvas showing the French light infantry cyclists marching past Gen. Dubail near Nancy on Christmas day, while an illuminating bit of life "intime" is in the picture of the English wounded at dinner at Nantes.

His winter scenes are particularly picturesque, now showing the French soldiers in wooden shoes and sheepskins clearing the snow from the roads on the Col de la Schlucht and again displaying a French regiment headed by drums and bugles passing through the snow covered forest of Sainte Barbe.

Swiftly sketched are many of them, but they are always vivid, accurate, and filled with the vast moving spirit of the great war itself. The interior of one trench is shown scarcely thirty meters from the enemy and where all of the men are under constant shell and rifle fire. Another broad sweep of French country gives us full view of a company halted on the Islettes road on their way back from active service in the trenches of Haute-Chevauchee. Then there is a "Death to the Boches" gun being taken in a blinding snow storm on its way to its position in the woods of Argonne. The French colonial troops eating their soup on their return from the trenches near the Four de Paris, Argonne, is a naturalistic touch done in light, cheerful colors.

A vision of gleaming gorgeous red is the portrait of Lieut. C. of the Moroccan Spahis. He would certainly make a splendid target for a German bullet if he ever neared the fighting lines in such an outfit. And the "Blue Devils" are here, too, halting for a rest on the forest near Tete de Faux with their arms stacked near them. Perhaps the loveliest piece of work from a purely artistic standpoint is the painting done in soft blues and purples, where the "Blue Devils" are observing from the Lac Noir road the effect of the bombardment which preceded the capture of the Barenkopf.

The catalogue of these paintings contains color reproductions of them all, together with an explanatory preface of each one, a foreword by H. G. Wells, and an introduction by Jean Richepin of the French academy. These paintings will be shown for another week.

All visitors to the thirtieth annual exhibition of American oil paintings and sculpture at the Art institute are invited to cast a vote for the Edward B. Butler popular prize of $100. The vote will be made for the picture considered the best by visitors and the period of voting will be from tomorrow until Sunday.

The Chicago Society of Etchers is to have its first informal meeting in the Art institute clubrooms on Friday evening. Members of the society will exhibit their new work.

An etching by J. C. Vondrous of New York will be presented to associate members for the year 1917. It is entitled "Old Town Bridge Tower, Prague," and as the plate is made for the society no copies can be had except through members.

The Palette and Chisel club opened its annual exhibition of sketches with a "camouflage dance" at its clubrooms on Saturday night.

Mrs. John Cudahy has donated a number of her paintings to the bazaar for the benefit of Old St. Mary's Roman Catholic church. The bazaar is being held at the Congress hotel. These paintings include "Nature's Mirror," by Leon Bazile Perrault; "The Cavalier," by Cesare Detti; "A Cozy Corner," by Virgilio Tojette; "French Boy," by Emile Munier, and "Spring Time," by L. L. Williams.

The collection of Japanese color prints, owned by Frank Lloyd Wright and in the galleries of the Arts club, is proving to be quite as much of a charmer as even the most fervid enthusiast of this uniquely oriental branch of art could possibly desire. Against the pastel gold of the gallery walls these prints stand out in daring color combinations, effecting a fairylike brightness of hue which is amazingly different from any exhibition of western art ever seen.

Before I saw this exhibit I may say that Japanese displays of color prints have never carried with them any special appeal for me. But before this collection of Mr. Wright's it would seem that the most indifferent observer of Japanese prints would be moved to something stronger than enthusiasm; an odd mixture perhaps of sheer pleasure in the wealth of colors, the grace of lines, the fantastic exaggerations of form and shape which are in no way comparable to anything in western art and therefore form a world of their own.

The preface in the catalogue, written by Mr. Wright himself, is an eloquent tribute to this phase of art. He can hardly speak with sufficient ardor of this magnificent world inside of a world which has sprung up among us in the last twenty years. Larger growing all the time as the number of collections in this country increases and the appreciation of the public deepens, Mr. Wright hopes that through this display of his collection, one of the finest in this country, many students of art as well as lovers of art will be added to those numbers for whom the color prints of Japan have an ever living appeal and fascination.

A distinctive feature of the exhibit which should not be overlooked is the Japanese gold screens which are arranged as hemicycles in the large gallery and in the clubroom. These are six fold screens from the Momoyama period, some 300 years ago, a period in Japanese art when everything done was vigorous and full of strength. One design is of maple leaves in the gilded goffrage characteristic of the period and another is a grape design in gilded goffrage on plain copper.

For the person who has little knowledge of Japanese prints there are many books to be had which really add an inestimable amount to the pleasure of the exhibition. Basil Stewart has a new book out on collecting and appreciating these color prints.

The TRIBUNE'S WEEKLY ALMANACK

NOVEMBER

Gray Days.

NARROWED horizons inclose an intimate world of brown and gray, and if the gray geese be not flying in the gray sky their presence is suggested and the intimation is of snow. Leafage of brown and vault of slate and damp dead leaves rustled under foot; bare fields stretching away in the valley lined with yellow roads, a gray etching without a patch of color.

A gray day is an esthetic refinement, void of bright allurements and dominant colors, gratifying the perceptions by its lack of bold outlines and of vivid flashes. Without warmth of color it warms the jovial mood. In its true meaning it is genial, suggestive of the unknown good which indomitable human optimism places just beyond the horizon which tomorrow's sun will reach in setting.

Life is not all a flutter of banners and a crash of drums. It is not all radiance and dancing ecstasy in the sunlight. It must veil some realities to give colors to some illusions. A gray day presents undecorated walls for illusion to paint. It draws curtains closely to suggest the good greater than reality which is just beyond them.

Reality is dimmed that fancy may be warm and highly colored.

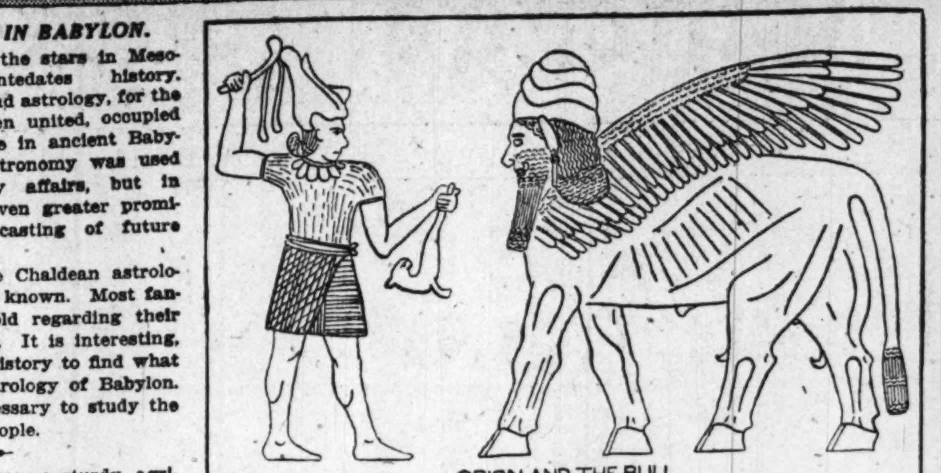
ASTRONOMY

ASTRONOMY IN BABYLON.

THE study of the stars in Mesopotamia antedates history. Astronomy and astrology, for the two were then united, occupied an important place in ancient Babylon. In Egypt astronomy was used to symbolize daily affairs, but in Babylon it was given greater prominence in the forecasting of future events.

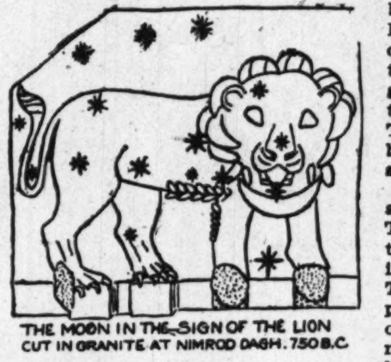
The fame of the Chaldean astrologers is universally known. Most fantastic tales are told regarding their sorcery and magic. It is interesting, then, to examine history to find what constituted the astrology of Babylon. To do so it is necessary to study the daily lives of its people.



ORION AND THE BULL
FROM NIMROUD 1000 B C

The Chaldeans were a sturdy, agricultural race. The land in which they lived had great extremes of climate. The summers were dry and hot and the winters, especially in the rugged northern part, were cold. The rainfall was scant and water had to be carefully hoarded in reservoirs. Much of the land was dependent upon the floods of the Tigris and Euphrates rivers for irrigation, and a drought was sure to result in famine and suffering. Therefore the kings appointed astrologers to scrutinize the sky to fortell not the places of the moon and planets but the weather.

In order to carry on their work properly these observers had to determine the sun's path, the length of the seasons, and the accurate directions. In the ruins of the old cities there are entire libraries composed of almanacs and records of the seasons. They discovered among other things that the sun's heat is variable from year to year, so that every eleven years the crops would be unusually good, while five or six years later they would be poor. It has since been learned that these cycles are caused by sun spots, but the ancients showed great skill in detecting them, for the total variation of heat is less than 5 per cent.



THE MOON IN THE SIGN OF THE LION CUT IN GRANITE AT NIMROD DAGH. 750 B.C.

It is not surprising that such faithful observers should have found time to chart the planets. In observing the moon they discovered the Saros, a period of nineteen years in which eclipses repeat themselves. Their observations of the constellations give a clew as to the time when civilization began to be felt in Babylonia.

The bull and the lion are important characters in their mythology and sculpture. Before 3,000 B. C. spring began when the sun was in the constellation of the bull, while by the time of the summer solstice the sun was in the lion. There is no doubt that their great winged bulls and lions refer to the constellations which we know as Taurus and Leo because carvings have been found with the configurations of stars upon them.

The Babylonians counted not by tens and hundreds as we do but by sixties. This was because they had found that the radius of a circle is contained within the circumference just six times. This "system of sixty" persists to the present time in clocks, where sixty seconds make one minute, sixty minutes make one hour, while there are twelve hours of day and twelve of night.

THE WAR AND AFTER.

Comprehensive perception of the war reveals it as a preliminary to the accomplishment of a purpose rather than as the accomplishment. There is an opinion prevailing among intellectuals that mankind is now endeavoring to reach a safer basis of international relations and that it can do so only by overthrowing a malignant caste established in central Europe.

With this caste disposed of and the peoples dominated by it released, the world then would be ready to accept an agreement for the maintenance of order, the preservation of peace, and the protection of all peoples in their orderly lives.

This opinion regards the war as a consequential part of a malevolent and destructive phenomenon arising in Prussia. This phenomenon, we are to assume, revealed itself contrary to the general trend of the world and was powerful enough to disrupt the world.

When the malignant forces released by the phenomenon of Prussian militarism have been reduced and their power taken away, the German people and the other people of the central alliance, escaping from a bondage of ideas and a prison of emotions, getting out from under the corrupting influences of a caste whose power was derived from them, will submit gladly to the better order of international relations which will be maintained by agreements, courts, international police, or any other mechanism found workable.

If these ideas are to prevail in the United States, then this war may be regarded as the end of an endeavor. It is not necessary to look beyond it. It is not necessary to prepare for the future. The war is not a preliminary. Its experiences have no value as guides for the future. It is complete in itself. Its mistakes are its own and have no relation to other enterprises in which the United States will be involved later. It teaches, then, no lessons of more than immediate significance. It indicates no need to be met in domestic legislation or administration.

Against this theory and against this estimate of prospects we insist that they make a national policy of a speculation having no support in human experience. They insist that an idealized prospect shall be accepted as a dependable prospect, and that this prospect shall be the controlling factor in the guidance of the nation.

We insist that no such procedure is safe and that a nation cannot trust its future to the hope that events which it cannot control will agree with ideas of what they ought to be.

The only thing that the United States has firmly within its own control is the development and maintenance of its own strength. If it does develop and maintain its strength it is safe, dignified, and prosperous and there can be no question about it.

For the purpose of this rational theory, which has all the support of human experience, the war can be regarded only as a preliminary. We assume that national impulses, however chastened they may be by the war, will remain what they have been.

The forms of national expression, however modified they may be temporarily by the war, will be found again after national recovery. People, individually and collectively, will be thinking, acting, hoping, emotionalizing, working, and dreaming about the same fifty years from now as they were fifty years ago.

The changes in the essentials of thought, action, and emotion will be imperceptible. The changes in individual and national expression will be imperceptible. Fifty years from now a world just such as this one will be guided and controlled by the same general ideas.

If that be accepted as the rational prospect, then every lesson taught by American experience in this war should be cherished as a dearly purchased warning of what to avoid. If our lack of military strength has brought terrible suffering to this generation, the lack of military strength will bring terrible suffering to another generation.

If we could not control, by our peaceable intent, the attitude of Germany towards us in this generation, another generation will be unable to control, by its peaceful intent, the attitude of another powerful nation towards it.

If the war results, for the United States, merely in the overthrow of one military power and in the temporary relief of a nonmilitary nation from such dangers, it will have had no permanent result worthy of the sacrifices made.

It is wholly within the power of the United States to make its sacrifices effective. The American people do not have to depend upon any probable event or alien influence. If the war in giving them victory also gives them an adequate army and navy they have won for the future.

Public opinion developing along this rational line, insisting that the reasonable prospects of the United States determine the action of the United States, will obtain from congress the legislation needed to make the war a wholly successful preliminary to the complete establishment of the United States in security and honor.

Without this legislation the war will prove a preliminary which had no substantial result. This is the given opportunity and congress will have the power.

If the opportunity be wasted now we are certain that it will not offer itself effectively for many years. That is the reason for insistence now upon the comprehensive perception of the war, for insistence upon a correction of public opinion and for insistence upon congressional action which will give, among other things, universal service.

THE WOULD-BE AVIATOR.

Edgar Lee Hay, who tried for the aviation corps, flunked, and will try again, is not a college graduate. Not being a college graduate, he faced an examination "akin to a third degree and the Spanish inquisition." He was expected to know internal combustion engines, dihedral angles, the difference between a generator and a magneto, between tractor and pusher types of airplanes, and between four cycle and two cycle motors, despite the official assertion that "consideration will be given to the applicant's intelligence, his business or other training, travel, home study, athletic activity, and military training."

Young Hay comes from Newark, N. J. He passed the physical examination without a bump, but was surprised at the questions propounded at the mental examination. The aviation corps advertises for "men of daring, men of ability, men with clear heads, men with keen eyes," between the ages of 19 and 30, "preferably under 25," who "must be able to pass a stringent examination covering eyes, ears, heart, lungs, and sense of balance," and who possess a college education or its equivalent. What constitutes the equivalent of a college education? Minute technical knowledge? Acquaintanceship with internal combustion, dihedrals, generators, magnetos, tractors, pushers, four cycle motors, and two cycle motors? Young Hay is not furious. He has sat down in Newark, N. J., to acquire "the equivalent of a college education." Meanwhile he warns noncollegians what they are up against if they try for the aviation corps.

We think Mr. Hay would pursue his studies to better advantage inside the aviation corps than outside it. We regret that he was not accepted. While the warning he has given out may temporarily discourage noncollegians, we believe that it will serve a useful purpose by enabling the officers in charge of examinations to see that the object to be sought is not the exclusion of good men, but their acceptance. The sooner they are accepted and given an opportunity to acquire technical erudition under official instructors, the better for the men, the better for the service, and the better for America.

THE FRENCH INVASION OF AMERICA.

M. Jacques Copeau, who is about to open a French theater in New York, has been sent over for that purpose by the French minister of foreign affairs. Several of his actors have been released from the trenches by special orders from the French government so that they may perform in America. Equally official is the coming of Denys Amiel, who edits New France, and of Pierre de Laneux, French poet. Meanwhile French influence has seconded the founding of Les Amities Françaises, a society devoted to the furtherance of French commercial interests in America, and the recently organized Cercle des Amis de la France.

It is not only the captured Zeppelin that gives away German secrets. The far more important secret of "peaceful penetration" is now common property. In the light of subsequent developments the world realizes what Prince Henry's visit meant, what the Germanic museum at Harvard meant, what exchange professorships meant. Two can play at that game, France as well as Germany, though how different the French purpose from the German! France wants trade and the good will that fosters trade. Germany was seeking to undermine American sovereignty and to divide before conquering.

We welcome the French invasion of America. Indeed, we find it in our hearts to hope that after the war the French people will consent to court us by exchanging children. It is a charming French custom. A French family sends a child abroad and takes a child from a foreign family in exchange. Language study is one object. Another is international friendship. The French child, we hope, would return to France with a real love for America. The American child would return to America with a real love for France. One of the most illuminative comments on the war is contained in the figures representing the exchange of children between France and Germany. During the year 1913 France sent more children to Germany than ever before.

The French invasion of America has a confessedly commercial aim. So be it. An American invasion of France should be our answer. Military activities will do much. They should be backed up with an intellectual campaign definitely designed to foster trade. After the war commercial and industrial France will have to be modernized. Strangely old fashioned it has been. We talk of the "clever" French, and in technical matters they are cleverness personified, but in practical matters they are anywhere from ten to twenty years behind the times. They will need American devices, American system, American facilities. They will need them wholesale. The sooner Columbia gets on the right side of Marianne the more money there will be in Columbia's pocket.

Editorial of the Day

RAILWAYS AND THE GOVERNMENT.

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

The prompt denial of official responsibility for the startling statement from Washington that the government contemplates acquiring the railways is gratifying. There is one great obstable to government ownership of railways at this time which is apparent to everybody. The nation's war debt will soon reach staggering proportions without assuming the value of the railways as a government liability. But there is nothing in the situation to necessitate such a change even if it were financially feasible. The service rendered by the railways under central management has been remarkably efficient.

The country would be happy if it knew that all the regular governmental functions in connection with the war were being as well performed. The showing of increased railway business with only a slight increase in equipment is a striking illustration of the value of pooling under governmental regulation. It is hoped that the demonstration will result in the railways, regulated as to service, equipment, rates, and capitalization by the government, being exempted from the Sherman act, designed to curb unregulated private enterprises.

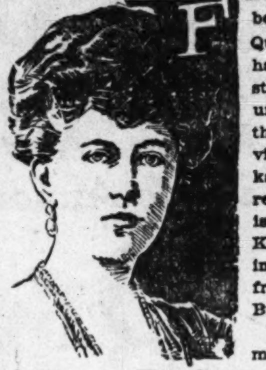
The only distressing feature of the present arrangement is the fact that the cost of operation is mounting faster than gross earnings. The government has recognized higher costs in everything except transportation. It has let general contracts based on costs indefensible except for unsettled prices. But it holds the railways to fixed rates based on past conditions. There is no way by which the railroads can escape their increased costs. Since they cannot shift them, they face alarming prospects.

In England the railways keep no track of government business, but the government pays them enough to make their net earnings equal what they were before the war. The roads are run under central management, much as they are here. The relief our railways have sought from the interstate commerce commission has been allowed only in part, the decision being based on hopes that have not materialized.

A new petition is to be made to a commission containing new members unfamiliar with conditions. If the relief is not granted it will devolve on the government to give the railways treatment similar to that accorded contractors.

LA MARQUISE DE FONTENOY

[Copyright: 1917: By the Brentwood company.]



FROM Switzerland it has become known that ex-Queen Sophia of Greece has recently made, in the strictest incognito and under circumstances of the utmost secrecy, a visit to her brother, the kaiser, at Berlin. The reason for this secrecy is that her husband, King Constantine, is still in receipt of a pension from France and Great Britain.

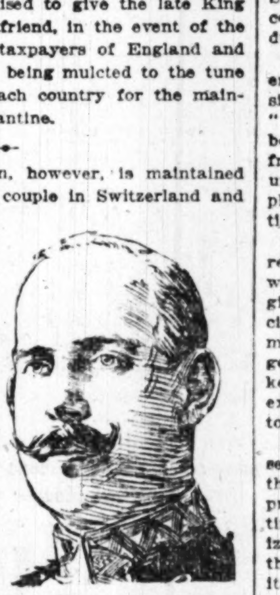
When William of Denmark was elected ruler of Greece as King George in 1863 the protecting powers, namely, Great Britain, France, and Russia, all alike interested in his welfare and in that of Greece, to whose independence they had so largely contributed, each undertook to furnish him with a sum of $20,000 a year in order to supplement his civil list. He likewise obtained from them an undertaking that in the event of his dethronement they would jointly pay him an annuity of $100,000 a year for the remainder of his life. At that time he was a younger son of perhaps the poorest monarch of Europe, namely, Christian IX. of Denmark.

The protecting powers, namely, France, Great Britain, and Russia, were under no obligation to continue to King Constantine the arrangement which they had made in 1863 with his father and which had lapsed with the latter's assassination. But largely through the influence of ex-Emperor Nicholas in Paris and in London the three governments consented to continue the allowance.

Of course the latter came to an end as far as Russia was concerned with the overthrow of ex-Czar Nicholas, and there has been no disposition to renew it by the provisional governments at Petrograd, which have in turn publicly expressed their pronounced disapproval of the intervention of the entente powers in Greece and the elevation to the throne of young King Alexander. They were of the opinion that the dynasty should not have been allowed to remain and that Greece should have become a republic.

Great Britain and France, however, although Constantine was in a state of virtual war against them, went on paying his annuity until his abdication, and in spite of the fact that they were under no obligation to do so, yet they both agreed to pay him during his good behavior the annuity of $100,000 a year that they had promised to give the late King George, their most loyal friend, in the event of the loss of his crown. The taxpayers of England and France are therefore now being mulcted to the tune of $50,000 a year from each country for the maintenance of ex-King Constantine.

Constant communication, however, is maintained between the royal Greek couple in Switzerland and the kaiser through King Constantine's principal secretary, confidant, and former minister of state, George von Streit, who makes weekly trips to Berlin. As indicated by his name, which is the German word for "strife," he is a hyphenated Greek; that is to say, he is a member of an old family of the kingdom of Saxony, and his grandfather was an officer of the Saxon army who volunteered for service in the Greek army when the Bavarian Prince Otho was elected king of the Hellenes.



His father, Stephen von Streit, was one of the most eminent professors of the University of Athens, occupying the chair of political economy, which he resigned in order to become governor of the National Bank of Greece, and then minister of finance, while in 1897 he acted as the plenopotentiary of his government in the negotiations with the great powers for the settlement of Greece's national debt.

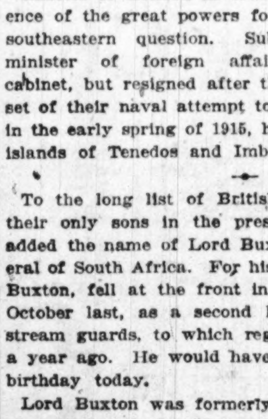
George von Streit, his son, is now about 50 years of age, was born at Patras, but was educated entirely in Germany, being a fellow student of ex-King Constantine at the German University of Heidelberg. On his return to Greece he was elected to his father's chair of professor of political economy at the University of Athens, and was for several years the chief counsel of the Greek department of foreign affairs. He will be remembered by Americans present at the last peace congress of The Hague as the second delegate of the Hellenic government. He is married to a daughter of the late Karatheodory Pasha, who was for many years Turkish governor general and Prince of Samos, and afterward Ottoman ambassador in London.

George von Streit was for a time Greek envoy at Vienna, and after the first Balkan war accompanied Venizelos to London in order to attend the conference of the great powers for the settlement of the southeastern question. Subsequently he became minister of foreign affairs in the Venizelos cabinet, but resigned after the English, at the outset of their naval attempt to force the Dardanelles, in the early spring of 1915, had occupied the Ægean islands of Tenedos and Imbros.

To the long list of British peers who have lost their only sons in the present war must now be added the name of Lord Buxton, the governor general of South Africa. For his only boy, young Denis Buxton, fell at the front in France on the 9th of October last, as a second lieutenant of the Coldstream guards, to which regiment he was gazetted a year ago. He would have attained his twentieth birthday today.

Lord Buxton was formerly president of the government board of trade, which is the official title of the minister of commerce in England. He was also postmaster general, and was raised to the peerage as a viscount on being appointed governor general of South Africa.

The Buxtons are an Essex family, the members of which have played an important rôle during the last 300 years, notably the first baronet of the line, Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, who was one of the leaders of the slavery abolition movement in England, and also the prison reform agitation, in conjunction with his sister-in-law, Elizabeth Fry, an agitation which spread all over Europe and America, and which brought about a wonderful improvement in the treatment of both prisoners and lunatics.



The present head of the family, Sir Thomas Powell Buxton, fourth baronet of his line, has for a number of years past been the very active president of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery society.

The Buxtons derive their great wealth from banking, and especially from brewing, being identified with the great firms of Truman, Hanbury, Buxton & Co., and also with that of Barclays, Ltd. They are all disposed to be evangelical and straight laced, haunt the Athanaeum in London rather than the Turf club, and while intellectual, lack imagination, and are deficient in any sense of humor.

KEEPING BOYS FIT.

IN a war there is physical examination of some millions of young men taken as they come. Such examination discloses that a large percentage are physically unsound; that it would be a waste of money to try to make them into soldiers. Either they would break down under training or they would wear out or go to pieces in war or they would clutter the pension rolls after the war was over.

With every war impetus is given military training in schools. Teachers say that from the standpoint of education of mind such training is wasteful. The United States bureau of education says that foreign educators regard military training in schools "as an anomaly in the school system justified only by the exigencies of the national defense." They do not regard "military instruction as a successful substitute for the well established systems of physical training and character building."

One writer is quoted as saying military training may present, as regards hygiene, serious inconveniences; it implies rigid discipline, which is condemned by true pedagogy. Outside of that it produces results that are only partial, limited and special.

Further proof of the opinion is furnished by the circumstances under which military instruction in schools has been instituted by legislative requirement. In France the movement was started just after and as a result of the Franco-Prussian war. In Germany it began about one hundred years ago as a result of the Napoleonic wars.

In Switzerland the school military training called preparatory gymnastics is a part of, and thoroughly correlated with, the military service. Under the head of military organization of the Swiss republic there is provision for courses of calisthenics for young men during their school courses.

As the next step there is provision for encouragement through grants of subsidies and furnishing of instructors of "all associations and efforts toward the bodily development of the young men from the time of their leaving school until incorporated in the army." A physical examination is given at the time of enlistment.

The course in preparatory gymnastics requires a minimum of two hours a week in every school year. The course given to boys 7 to 8 consists in exercises to develop the leg, arms, and trunk muscles and to train them to work together under control of the brain to keep the joints limber; also breathing exercises. That to boys 8 to 9 begins to assume more drill features.

From that time on to the end of the seventh year [13 to 14 years of age] there is a progressive increase in the proportion of the drills and other distinctly military exercises. The organizations formed to fill in the gap between the school age [14 years] and the military age are called cadet corps. In addition to gymnastics these boys drill some with and some without arms and they take part in target practice.

In Sweden the work in gymnastics is supplemented by military drill. Military drill is compulsory in all public secondary schools. These correspond about to our high schools. The boys devote sixty hours a year to it. The plan is to devote four hours a day for the first fifteen days of each school year to this work. During the last ten years more of this time has been given to rifle target practice than to the ordinary military drills. The instructors are the gymnasium teachers.

In Norway military training is not compulsory in the public schools, but it is encouraged by governmental grants. In England military training is not required in the public schools, but a large number of English youths belong to the cadet corps, which have been running since 1860.

"It was observed that a surprisingly large number of young men enlisted in Kitchener's army had previous military drill in cadet corps, which proved of great advantage in their hurried preparation for active service." The cadet corps are supplemented by boys' brigades and by boy scouts. The object of the boys' brigade is to develop Christian manliness by means of physical training and discipline. The brigades exercise in military movements and gymnastics and participate in summer camps.

The boy scout movement originated in 1908. The bureau of education report says of the boy scout movement: "The character and mind developed in the boys by the scout system are those highly valued in military service and indispensable in at least one branch of that service—namely, scouting and patrolling."

In Australia the following military service is compulsory. Junior cadets, 12 to 14 years of age. Senior cadets, 14 to 18 years of age. Citizen force, 18 to 26 years of age. The junior cadet has ninety hours a year of training. His training consists of fifteen minutes each day given to gymnastic work and elementary drill. The special aim of this training is to develop physique.

The boys run, jump, swim, and go through some gymnastic exercises. They learn first aid, manners, compass work, and elementary signaling. The senior cadet service consists of forty drills each year for four years. Four of these drills are four hour drills, twelve are two hour drills, and the remainder are night drills of not less than one hour each.

Every boy in Australia must register within two months after his fourteenth birthday. There is a good deal of military drill in the exercises of the senior cadets. Discipline is strongly inculcated. The reports are that this system has improved the average physique. The police report that the behavior of the youths is vastly improved. "There is increased self-respect, diminution of juvenile cigaret smoking, and generally a tendency toward a sense of responsibility and a desire to become a good citizen.

In New Zealand the system is about the same as that in Australia, except that the work does not begin until the boy is 14. Employers remark upon the improvement of the cadets in their general conduct, physique, and sense of civil obligation.

In Canada military training in schools is not obligatory. In the majority of the provinces physical training is prescribed in all primary schools. Some military drill is frequently embodied in this physical training.

In France the work is limited to the middle and higher divisions of the elementary schools. It is planned to teach military drill more than to improve physique. In fact, the latter aim seems to be wholly incidental, if it can be called an aim at all. We find such instructions. "For pupils over 10 years of age exercise in shooting at forty feet with Flobert rifles. The inspectors of primary schools shall report every year as to organization of target practice."

In 1914 the Prussian ministries of war issued a decree that all boys over 16 years of age not in military service shall receive preparatory military training in school. This training is given two hours a week. It is a combination of gymnastics and drilling without arms.

In Bavaria some of the subjects covered in this military training in the public schools are: Hygienic exercises, ordinary drilling, elements of knowledge of terrain, distance estimating, prompt naming and discriminating of similar objects, memory exercises with a view of preparing pupils for reporting orally their observations, hearing exercises, making correct conclusions from observation of terrain, reporting on observations made, correct repetition of short orders, the use of the watch compass, distance measuring apparatus and the Morse code, the use of maps, flag signaling, field gymnastics, first aid work, kindling fires and other work similar to that done by Boy Scouts, digging of trenches, hiding as when on skirmish lines, running of independent errands.

"All means must be used to train the youths in endurance and strong will. No task once undertaken should be given up. Every one must fulfill his duty to the end." Purely physical training in free exercises, gymnastics, running games.

While most of this work aims directly at military preparation, it is training of the faculties and education of a very helpful sort. Development of physique and improvement in general health and resistance to disease is a necessary outcome, even though it is not a primary aim.

In Austria military training in the secondary schools is not obligatory, but it is encouraged by the government through grants and privileges from the government. Target practice is prominent in their courses of instruction.

In Hungary military training in the schools, while not required, is very much encouraged. In 1907, and no later reports are available, military training was being given in 150 elementary schools. The programs are said to be very practical. Special attention is given to target work. This is said to be very helpful to the eyesight of pupils overfatigued by study. By decree issued in 1915 military instruction is made obligatory in the last three years of certain gymnasia.

In Italy military training is obligatory in national colleges. There are some private facilities for the military training of younger boys.

In Spain no military training is given in the schools. Some simple drill is included in the program of physical training.

In Portugal about the same system prevails as in Spain. In Russia there are military gymnastics in the elementary and secondary schools. In Holland there is provision for optional military training in voluntary organizations for boys over 15 years of age. In Greece there are simple drills in connection with physical training in all public schools. Very intensive military instruction is given in the gymnasia.

In Japan military drill is obligatory for boys 5 years of age and older. In the middle schools, probably corresponding to our higher grades and high schools, military gymnastics is given throughout the course. It consists of horizontal bar, shelf, wooden-horse, and parallel bar exercises. Fencing and jiu jitsu are optional. The drills go as far as blank firing and mimic fighting. In the higher schools gymnastics and military drill are prescribed.

In Mexico there is obligatory drill with arms in all primary and secondary schools. In Argentina there is obligatory military training in the last two years of the secondary schools. In Bolivia there are simple drills in connection with gymnastic exercises.

In the United States there is no uniformity among the practices of the several states. Theoretically at least there are gymnastic exercises in the primary and secondary schools. In the rural districts it is generally assumed that the student gets all the exercise he needs doing the chores at home, getting to and from school, and in the individualistic play of the playground and play places not attached to the school.

In the cities and larger towns there are more or less well developed courses in gymnastics as well as the provisions for play in the gymnasia and playgrounds. As a result of this war there is a moderate development of military drill in the common schools. There is provision for military training in certain universities and colleges subsidized by the federal government.

The universities and colleges divide their athletics into major and minor. They provide for football, baseball, track and gymnasium teams which come under the heading major athletics. In some of them the regulations require that each pupil shall have a physical examination, shall keep in good health, shall learn something about personal hygiene, and shall engage in some one of the exercises classed as minor athletics.

Such is the plan in the University of Wisconsin, and I know of no university with a better one. In some of these great universities and colleges, as for instance Ames Agricultural college, military training is stressed. In others it is an option, one that is not especially stressed.

DIET FOR CATARRH OF STOMACH.

S. A. R. writes: "1. What preparation of iron do you consider the least harmful on the stomach?

"2. What do you advise for a person suffering with catarrh of the stomach, coupled with constipation? Is bran advisable under such conditions?"

REPLY.

1. Blaud's pills.

2. Drink a glass of water immediately upon arising. Keep water at hand and drink six to eight glasses between meals. Eat fruit at breakfast and at least once more during the day. Eat bran as a cereal. Eat bran bread.

BASKETBALL EQUIPMENT IN SCHOOLS.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Will not the board of education equip the gymnasium of the Lawson school with basketball apparatus?

This is a fine gymnasium and has been built about two and a half years, but up to the present time no provisions have been made for basketball devotees. This is quite an important winter sport. JULIUS STERN.

Basketball equipment for the Lawson school will be provided upon request from the principal, if in his judgment such equipment is necessary. E. E. COLE, Assistant Superintendent of Schools.

SUNDAY CLOSING FOR BAKERS.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Is there a law originating from Washington for all retail bakers to close their stores at 10 o'clock Sundays, or is it a ruling made by the Master Bakers' association? E. L. C.

There is no law or ruling emanating from Washington on 10 o'clock Sunday closing. The matter has been discussed by the bakers with the state council of defense. Regulations for bakers will be discussed at Washington during the week of Nov. 12, and meetings will be held in Chicago when the Washington rules are ready to be announced.

Fort Madison, Ia., Nov. 15.—[To the Friend of the People.]—If given notice to appear at the local board for physical examination would I be compelled to appear there? I am at present working a considerable distance from my home. E. C. HAY.

It will be absolutely necessary for you to appear at your local board for examination. If you do not do so you will be placed on the "Failed to Report List," and will be sent for under military orders.

LOSS OF BAGGAGE.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[To the Leg[illegible] of the People.]—An express co[illegible] this city forwarded for me on a written order, money and [illegible] check to the parcel room of a [illegible] station at Cleveland, for transfer of my baggage to their main office in this city. After repeated letters of inquiry concerning the baggage I have heard nothing from them. Would the fact that the baggage check has not been returned to me in any way affect their payment in case of loss to the amount of $35, specified in their receipt to me? J. D.

Your case, without the check, would be somewhat more difficult to prove, but upon testimony supporting the story you tell us you should get a judgment. We advise you to give them more time.

DEPENDS ON AGREEMENT.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—If a brokerage firm sells out an account because client has fallen behind on one payment, stock having been bought on partial payment plan, is client responsible for deficit, stock having depreciated? If so, is husband responsible for wife's debt? R. C. H.

1. Depends on the agreement under which the firm was employed.

2. A husband would not be liable for a wife's debt of this character unless additional facts are involved.

WIFE'S SHARE OF ESTATE.

Chicago, Nov. 13.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—How much of a man's estate can his wife claim if he should die and leave no will? There are no children. M. W.

All the personalty and half the realty, with a life interest in one-third of the remaining half. Also widow's award and homestead depending on the facts.

As but limited space can be given letters in this department, writers must confine themselves to 200 or 300 words. Unless they give us their full names and addresses their letters will not be considered. No manuscript will be returned unless the writer sends postage for that purpose.

THEIR ALTERNATIVE.

Battle Creek, Mich., Nov. 14.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—You print a complaint from an "osteopathic physician," who complains of the injustice in the attitude of our war department in not admitting these practitioners to the service of the government. He says: "Our law in Illinois permits us to do anything a medical doctor may do but administer internal medication for curative purposes."

Would the osteopaths themselves claim the right to administer drugs for any other purpose? Do the drugless healers employ chloroform and ether for anæsthetic purposes, and, if so, by what authority of law? How would an osteopath treat a case of diphtheria without antitoxin or iritis without atropine or some analogous drug? What sort of osteopathic treatment would protect our soldiers against the ravages of typhoid fever? In case of accidental poisoning, what person in his right senses would send for a drugless healer?

I am not in favor of legislative medication, but our soldiers and sailors are abundantly entitled to every advantage of modern science. Our army is no place for experimentation of any sort. If the osteopaths complain that they are not permitted by law to administer drugs internally, and deem themselves the victims of injustice, all they have to do is to provide themselves with a medical education and comply with the laws governing the practice of qualified physicians. HOWARD CRUTCHER.

WASTE IN RESTAURANTS.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Mr. Singler's letter is to the point, but in my observation the average restauant is worse than the average downtown cafeteria.

There may be a good reason why the restaurant should charge 10 cents or over for any kind of vegetable and serve about three times as much as the average person wants for that price, but it is certainly not conducive to food conservation. This has been the invariable rule in most restaurants outside the loop for years, and as a consequence separate orders of vegetables in addition to the meat order (also too large in time past, if not now) were prohibitive to the necessarily economical eater.

BAKED FROZEN POTATOES.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Seeing in the papers that trainloads of potatoes have been thrown away because they were frozen looks to me as a criminal waste of good foodstuffs. In the mountains of Peru the chief food of the Indians consists of potatoes which have been frozen and dried so that they keep for months when they are boiled with water and eaten in the form of a thick soup or mush.

In this climate the frozen potatoes would probably rot if not dried by artificial means, but this decomposition could be checked by baking, which would leave the potatoes in the form of starch, which will keep indefinitely in a dry place. Here is an opportunity for some food speculator to get rich and at the same time be a public benefactor by baking the tons of potatoes which have been thrown away and putting a new food on the market (baked frozen potatoes in one pound paper boxes).

BANDAGES, NOT BRIDGE.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I read with approval your editorial, "Women in War." I am deeply interested in all efforts to secure comforts for the gallant men who are risking their all for our country and for us. The war has not as yet been brought close to all as it has to some of us. I am sure there are many sheltered women, wives of the well to do, at present engaged in bridge parties and other useless activities who could be easily induced to make surgical bandages and at the same time secure an equal amount of social enjoyment.

WASTE IN GARBAGE CANS.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—It occurred to me that an inspection of garbage cans by officers or volunteers appointed for that purpose would aid in the elimination of waste in our kitchens. Some years ago officers were appointed to enforce the separation of ashes and papers from kitchen refuse, with the result that it is now an established custom. If there were officers to report violations of the food conservation law it would no doubt result in a great reduction of waste.

Moreover, it would impress our people with the rigid necessity of cooperation with the government in this matter.

SIDELIGHTS

By Charlotte Burd

THOSE who have never lived in Germany may find it difficult to understand why, at the outbreak of the world war, so many Americans living there could sympathize with the German cause. Some of them, as the newspapers put it, fraternized with the Germans. The Germans always have been attracted by the American dollar and to the individual American by an adaptable nature those of the Fatherland know how to make it very pleasant, indeed. Then the Americans living in Germany do not ordinarily very closely read even the doctored German newspapers.

It was in 1895 that I first went to Göttingen, Germany, to study. Naturally, hearing practically nothing but the German language, learning how properly to read, write, and understand it when spoken, and trying to adapt myself to the customs of a foreign country, was straining. So straining was it that with two private lessons a week and two or more classroom hours on each of the six days of the week, I often found my bodily strength depleted.

Yet withal so much was done for my pleasure that I enjoyed the whole life hugely. If anybody ever had a good time I have always felt that on that first sojourn in Germany I had it. We went on frequent picnic parties and made many tours to the surrounding ruined castles and other points of old historic interest. And on these trips they used sometimes to sing "Deutschland über Alles." I have even an inflamed degree of loyalty to "Old Glory." But, as sung on these occasions of good will, so innocent and purely patriotic did this German song sound that, had I known how, I would have heartily joined in. I had never stopped seriously to weigh what must be the psychological influence on a race which for generations gives itself up to such utterances. And I thought that I knew a great deal about all my German friends.

ON this first visit to Germany I studied in a höhere Töchterschule—that is, a high school for girls. This school was conducted especially for the daughters of German gentlemen. In this case the "gentlemen" were chiefly professors in the local university, with a noticeable sprinkling of wealthy merchants.

Two years later I returned to Göttingen to study at the university. Between me and my German friends this greatly changed relations. For anything which in the least savors of social rank the Germans have an envious sort of respect. I now had to meet the ingrained envy as well as the honest disapproval of the native men and women who did not believe in the higher education of women. Naturally, my pleasure was considerably dampened. But I had a rich compensation in a more intellectual companionship and in a higher social consideration. As it happened, it was about the worst time in its history for a woman to apply for any university privileges at the University of Göttingen. Under a new and unfriendly prorector it had been planned rigidly to exclude all women unless undoubted preparation was proved. Preparation in Greek was desirable, but the stress was laid on Latin. However, with my Yankee resourcefulness I determined to make the most of the situation.

With bold exterior but quaking heart I faced the terror in the prorector's ooffice to plead excuse for the temeerity of my educational aspirations. He demanded imperatively whether I had ever studied Latin. I had anticipated this question and prepared for it. So, instead of informing him how many years I had studied Latin, I glibly named over the books which I had read. Evidently this had the desired effect, for with a somewhat subdued air he declared that he had not read all those himself.

In reality I had done all my work in Latin in five years, so that at home something more than a natural modesty would have kept me from boasting of my acquirements in this one of the dead languages. But, as I well knew, it would have taken a German man eight or ten years to do the same work. So I safely passed the ogre's den to the real examination under a dear old professor who sympathized utterly with the woman's cause and yet so loved the university that he would not have passed an unprepared candidate.

BY the way, it is time for the world to realize that the great length of time which a German man takes to master a subject is not due wholly to an inborn thoroughness. He has to have more time than other people. As far back as we know of German history the German man has been a constant drinker of intoxicants. His brain is always beer sodden and that fact makes him slow and heavy in grasping ideas. In this respect one of the German university professors himself complimented the superior intellectuality of the university women to that of the men. But when an idea is once grasped, however erroneous, it is there forever. It could not be displaced by any means possible to argument or proof.

On this second visit to Germany it was not long before I began to learn new undreamed of things about the Germans. For instance one evening at our pension, our home, we were to have a party and tableaux were to be a feature of the entertainment. The principal tableau was to represent a group of the different nations present in our home. One of the German girls was to be Germania, or Germany; a Scotch girl took the part of Great Britain, mademoiselle from Paris was to stand for France, while the writer was to represent the Stars and Stripes. Accordingly, we all assumed the befitting regalias.

It was behind the scenes and the curtain was still down. Germany stood forth in her proud panoply of crest, spear, and coat of arms, while fair France boasted a sword and the lilies of France. It was a moment of idle waiting till the last participant in the tableau should be ready. For want of other employment, in sheer fun France drew her sword and jabbed it threateningly toward Germany.

Instantly a surprising change, but a marked one, passed over the face of every German present, a look of alarm, of wounded love. Great Britain, the United States, and equally France looked on in amazement. Then in the French way, France laughed off the embarrassing constraint of the moment. But it was so significant that none present was likely ever to forget it. Now in a circle of friends what had really caused that unexpected change of expression on all the German faces?

THE Maine was sunk. As I was still in provincial Göttingen, I was not well informed as to what was going on at home, and had not had an inkling that war with Spain impended. I had now decided to continue my work in the friendlier and richer atmosphere of Berlin. On the eve of my departure, in compliment to me, my private teacher, now a doctor of philosophy, was invited to dinner. Now, throughout nearly three years of friendship, this man had always been to me the very soul of courtesy and, if my country had ever been mentioned at all, it was done in some pleasant way.

The subject of the Maine came up. In view of what had gone before, all the greater was my amazement when with an ugly scowl my teacher friend declared that the United States needed a good thrashing and that Germany was well able to administer the thrashing. I laughed it off none too pleasantly, but could not imagine what had caused this outbreak of boorishness in a man who prided himself on his correct manners.

The war with Spain came on. The University of Berlin was manifestly stirred. The professors referred to the situation in their lectures, students all over the university premises conferred in low tones with their heads together, and those within earshot heard over and over again the word die Vereinigten Staaten, the United States. The newspapers were full of war news, most of which was very, very "yellow." The editors of even the best papers were not too dignified to print abusive articles about American women, articles unprintable in any decent English or American newspaper, and even the American baby was assailed as if it had been some rare kind of monster. All because the United States had gone to war with—not Germany—but Spain. That was a moment when the veil dropped from the face of the present day German and he stood revealed for what he truly was, a being which the casual visitor seldom glimpsed. "Deutschland über Alles." Why had the United States ever been allowed to grow to full size!

For many years Bernhardiism has been taught in the lower schools for boys and often without dreaming of its full significance have I heard it spouted forth by boys. And my landlady in Berlin, who could not distinguish between the values of one-half and three-fourths, still secretly exulted that the German army was always ready for an instant attack and that it could thrash anything on earth. Let no one deceive himself that Prussian militarism is confined to the military class; at least, the Prussian population is penetrated through and through with it.

That, combined with the German slowness in grasping new ideas and the stubborn holding to those already acquired, is what makes it so hard a task for the social democrats to prepare Germany for the right kind of a peace. Considering these things, it really looks as if Germany will have to be whipped out of her evil thinking and doing. And it can be done, or at least Germany can be reduced to a harmless condition.

W. L. GEORGE, who is always spoken of as one of the most promising of the younger English novelists, is, like most of the English literary men, taking an active part in the running of domestic wartime England. Only, unlike most of them, he is an aggressive pacifist. And there is a lesson for all literary pacifists in his ceaseless work as assistant section officer in the ministry of munitions.

A London correspondent asked him how a pacifist finds himself working in the ministry of munitions. He said that to him "this war is an unmitigated calamity, but if he were running it the British would have performed the atrocities first, that is, anything to end the war. He knows it cannot be won by Germany; he wants very much that liberal ideas should win. So he worked for victory. And he says peace is coming," to quote the correspondent.

Asked about the effect the war would have on literature, Mr. George replied: "We have begun to see salvation not in economic but in political reform. That is what is going to color our writing after the war—the democratic movement. And as far as I can see, that is the only effect the war will have in literature. For the literature of the ages the war is only an incident. We have example after example of writers who before and after and during wars, have written masterpieces which did not relate to the wars. We will not be changed men. We, the writers of the world, will continue to perform our mission, which is to let the light in upon human actions. We shall hold the mirror up as before. The particular thing we will reflect will have more of the democratic quality; we shall deal not with the abuses of poverty but with the abuses of political autocracy."

The public library has posted a list of books on modern Italy, books of history, travel, and biography which will help us to understand a little more clearly this ally of ours.

"Hugh Gibson saw more of actual warfare than did any or all of our twenty-eight military men in Paris," wrote Richard Harding Davis in "With the Allies" [Scribner's]. Hugh Gibson was secretary to the American legation in Brussels. During the perilous days of the invasion of Belgium Mr. Gibson kept a journal, which has been the foundation for a volume which, although it recounts some tales which have often been told, does much toward making even clearer the picture of those days and nights of Belgium's tragic fall. "A Journal From Our Legation in Belgium" [Doubleday-Page] is an important inside statement of conditions.

"Before we were officially at war with Germany a boy I know who had been in Battery C, and who had got a furlough to go over to France and study gunnery at the artillery school at Fontainebleau, asked Col. Reilly what would be the best French dictionary for him to take with him. "There is only one which will be entirely satisfactory," the colonel said, 'A Dictionary of Artillery Terms,' by Cornelis De Witt Willcox." The dictionary could not be bought, and after much searching I found it for him in the public library—a war college publication of 1910 out of print. A letter to the superintendent of documents brought no reply. The document department of the library had only the one copy. The eager artilleryman went off without his military dictionary. The other day an announcement came from the Macmillan company, and in it was "War French," by Cornelis De Witt Willcox. Col. Willcox is a member of the faculty at West Point. Although "War French" is not an official U. S. document, it is as nearly official as anything except the original document could be. This dictionary, small enough to be carried in a pocket, by the way, is meant for all soldiers, not merely for artillerymen, but Col. Reilly's recommendation would not be recalled, I am sure.

Sara Teasdale's "Love Songs" [Macmillan] are as erquisitely pure lyrics as have come from any American poet's pen. They are lovely little things, real love songs, with the simplicity and beauty of unadorned verse. This little volume contains, besides new poems, lyrics taken from "Rivers to the Sea" and "Helen of Troy and Other Poems," and it is a veritable treasure chest of lyric beauties. Have you seen "The Look"?

> Strephon kissed me in the spring,
>   Robin in the fall,
> But Colin only looked at me
>   And never kissed at all.
> Strephon's kiss was lost in jest,
>   Robin's lost in play,
> But the kiss in Colin's eyes
>   Haunts me night and day.

Lieut Coningsby Dawson of Newark, N. J., and the Canadian expeditionary forces, who is in the United States on sick leave, had some interesting things to say the other day in New York about the way he was treated as an author in the trenches. "When the first copy of 'Carry On' arrived I was quite unprepared for it and did not use the necessary precaution in unwrapping the parcel. As the book fell out one of my pals caught sight of the name on the jacket. A struggle at once commenced for possession. Seeing that there were five officers against myself I was soon downed. They commenced to read selected passages aloud while two of them sat on my chest. Remembering, as I did, their opinion of authors in general and of myself in particular, I was rather more than embarrassed. Soon, however, the reading ceased. My two captors got off my chest and were leaning over one another's shoulders reading to themselves. I took my opportunity to slip out. When I returned I found them still reading without any look of cynicism on their faces. They looked up as I entered, and 'That's true,' they said. It was the most welcome indorsement I have ever received from any critic."

"William Dean Howells" (Huebsch), by Alexander Harvey, is the first book about our first American novelist.

If you resented H. G. Wells' "God, the Invisible King" (Macmillan), you'll be supported in your resentment by William Archer's critical and destructive examination in "God and Mr. Wells" (Knopf). "The Soul of a Bishop" (Macmillan) is "God, the Invisible King," recreated into a novel.

"Through Iron Bars" (John Lane) is Emile Cammaerts' setting forth of the tragic state of his native Belgium. It has seven of Raemakers' most poignant cartoons to help prove that iron bars do not a prison make—that Belgium is, despite them, undaunted.

"The Abandoned Room" (Doubleday-Page) is the story of a mystery that any amateur detec-a-tif will find a "hard nut to crack," in the words of Bird Center. Good mystery tales don't happen often. Which reminds me of "The Green Tree Mystery" (Appleton), by Roman Doubleday. One of the solutions of the maze of evidence is through the theories of right and left handedness in handwriting.

"What Is Man? and Other Essays" [Harpers] is a new book by Mark Twain which contains material never before published in book form. The essay which gives the book its title was published privately by Mark Twain to be distributed among his friends. Most of the other essays have appeared in magazines.

From London comes this Shaw story: The author of "Pygmalion" was walking down Adelphi terrace the other day when he passed an organ grinder who was industriously serving out popular melodies. As he passed the man held out a hat, murmuring, "Penny, sir?" "Press," flashed Shaw, and walked on.

MOLDING OUR SPEECH

By H. L. Mencken

THE eminent Dr. Brander Matthews makes an eloquent plea in a current learned review for ladies for a ban upon the uses of foreign words and phrases in English discourse, at least until they become wholly naturalized and "conform to our linguistic customs"—that is, until they are pronounced according to American principles and are spelled and make their plurals in the American manner. Before that, he says, their use is no more than "intellectual snobbery," and the caitiff who is guilty of it should be condemned to the hulks.

Alas, for the good doctor, the fates are against him, and not only the fates, but also the inner logic of philology. Grimm's law, or some process like it, will do the job he pleads for in good time, but before it can get into action there must be snobs to bring in the raw materials. I remember when "garage" was still laughed at as affected, and yet we needed it and had to have it, and in fifteen years the great American people have duly swallowed it, and digested it into "gar-rage," rhyming with "carriage."

So with "chassis," "chauffeur," "limousine." These are necessary words, and they have been completely assimilated, but unless there had been brave snobs to introduce them we would have gone without them. The process of assimilation, of course, is not instantaneous, and though it is quicker here than in England, there always remains a twilight period during which the common people try to naturalize the newcomer by major force, and the more delicate of ear and taste try to keep it in its original form.

THIS is what is now happening in the case of "chauffeur," "répertoire," "debut," "concessionaire," "nuance," "cloture," and other French words specifically mentioned by Dr. Matthews. They are coming in, but meanwhile they are still obviously French, and so it grieves the judicious to hear them pronounced "shoffer," "repertory" and "de-but" (rhyming with "nut"), and even to see them spelled without their proper accents.

Thus the painful business of appropriation goes on, and some of the importations resist Americanization very rigorously. Consider, for example, "café." A good many policemen and car conductors, I find, pronounce it "kaif," and some call it "kaffy," but though the former pronunciation is quite as good as our pronunciation of "trait" (which the English still pronounce as a French word), there is nevertheless something uncouth and ludicrous about it, and I dare say Dr. Matthews would whale any Columbia sophomore who presumed to use it in morning prayers.

So with "rathskeller," "employé," "nuance," and their like. They are horning in, like "boss," "prairie," and "stampede" before them, but it still grates the midriff to hear them pronounced "rats-killer," "employ-ee" (with accent on "ee"), "noonse," and so on. As it is, American is much more prompt than English to take in a foreign novelty, and much less self-conscious in using it. The English still regard "menu" as a French word and pronounce it accordingly: in American it was long ago naturalized as "mee-noo," with the accent on the first syllable. No American would think of sounding the Italian "z" sound in "piazza," but an educated Englishman does. In the same way we have transformed "cello" into "shello," the German "wurst" into "worst," and the "schw" in "schweizer" into the simpler "sw."

At a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra I once heard a New Yorker—a tall, thin man in a blue serge suit, called Fred by his wife—pronounce "scherzo" as if it were spelled "shirtso." Here is a tit-bit for Dr. Matthews.

Now and then, but only rarely, the English beat us in naturalizing new words. An example is afforded by the French "clôture." The editors of the "Congressional Record" are very careful to spell it in the French manner, though they leave off the accent over the "o." But in England it was Anglicized to "closure" many years ago, and it appears in that form in Hansard, in the London Times, and in English books.

THIS, however, is an exceptional case. In the main, American is far more hospitable to novelties than English and brings them into harmony with its own spirit much more rapidly. It often happens, indeed, that American adopts a newcomer, gives it opsonic treatment, and then exports it to England.

A good example is afforded by "toboggan." We got it from the French Canadians, who had derived it from the Indian word "adabagan," and after revising it and mellowing it we gave it to the English. Other such exported loan words are "canoe," "tapioca," and "Yankee." "Yankee" still puzzles the philologists, and many a bale of whiskers has been pulled out in debating it. One school holds that it originated in the Indians' attempt to pronounce the French word "Anglais." Another argues that it is an Indian mispronunciation of "English."

A third maintains that it is from the Dutch. A fourth sees its grandfather in the old Scotch word "yankie," meaning a lie. But, whatever the truth, the fact remains that the primeval Yankees applied it to themselves long before the English began to use it as a term of derision.

In later colonial times it supplied a very real need, for the discontented colonists were becoming disinclined to call themselves Englishmen, and there was yet no general use of American. "Yankee" met with opposition at the start and was denounced as vulgar.

Many leading men of the colonies, including George Washington, preferred to continue with Englishmen, but the word made its way nevertheless, and by the time of the revolution it was in almost universal use. It remained respectable until the civil war, when the southerners turned it to opprobrious uses. Today there is a sneer in it, especially in England.

Many of our common American words have rather surprising etymologies. "Squash," for example, is from the Indian word "isquontersquash." At the start it appeared in many forms—among them "askutasquash," "isquonkersquash," and "squantersquash"—but the American linguistic steam roller was early in operation, and soon it lost all its harsher syllables and began to appear in its shortened modern form. William Penn used it in that form so early as 1683. It has never gone over into English. The English know no more of squashes than they know of hominy or succotash.

Another curious Americanism is the word "pickaninny," which is seldom heard in England. After the makers of dictionaries had evolved various sweet sounding etymologies for it, deriving it from various outlandish Indian dialects, it was found to be no more than a corruption of the Spanish "pequeno nino," meaning a little child.

By a contrary error, "tamale" was once credited to the Spanish. It is actually a Mexican word, as the learned know who have sweated through such works as Senor Toro y Gisbert's "Americanismos." In the same way "gumbo," "juba," and "hoodoo" were once considered borrowings from the Spaniards, but it is now known that they are all African words, brought in by the slaves.

More different varieties of immigrants come to the United States than to any other country in the world, and nearly all of them make contributions to the national language. American is very much richer in such loan words than English.

We began to borrow words from the German when the first immigrants from the Palatinate reached Pennsylvania in 1692, and some of those words—for example, "sauerkraut" and "noodle"—are in universal use among us to this day.

The heavy German immigration of the '40s and '50s greatly reinforced the stock. Some of its contributions, used without the slightest sense of foreignness by all Americans, are "pretzel," "pumpernickel," "bock beer," "frankfurter," "rathskeller, "katzenjammer," "delicatessen," and "kindergarten." Of these words only the last has got into the English of England.

We are not a race of linguists, but this endless pouring in of strangers fills our language with many strange phrases. All Americans, for example, know what "Erin go bragh" means. They know what "wiegehts," "ganz gut," and "heraus mit ihm" mean. They know what the Yiddish "Ich gebibble" means.

And they know the meaning, too, of a great many single foreign words—the Yiddish "kosher" and "ganov"; the Chinese "fan tan," "chop suey," "yok-a-mi," and "joss"; the German "prosit" (really Latin), "Kriskringle," and "schnitzel"; the Spanish "bonanza," "desperado," and "El Dorado"; the French "portage" and "bureau."

ANTI-PATRIOTISM

By Rollin Lynde Hartt

THE Bolsheviki—Russian for "the majority"—are led by a rattle headed pro-German, half dupe, half rogue. Among his followers you will find I. W. W.'s, the same who paraded American towns with banners marked, "No God, no country." They were internationalists here. They are internationalists there. For one "intellectual" count a thousand illiterates, and the "intellectual" bears a curious resemblance to the Bostonians whom an outsider described as "educated beyond their intellects." A disreputable doctrine this of the internationalists, if you judge it by the general run of its devotees. Some are Socialists of the baser sort, some out and out anarchists. What then? Dismiss the whole movement as grotesque, misguided, blind—the work of scamps and fools?

Hervé was no fool. Ibsen was no fool. Tennyson was no fool. Dr. Samuel Johnson was no fool. If internationalism appeals to demireps, illiterates, and nameless curmudgeons, it has gained a degree of respectability from utterances let drop by several fairly illustrious writers. Dr. Johnson called patriotism "the last refuge of a scoundrel." Tennyson wanted "the parliament of man, the federation of the world." Ibsen, in a notebook published after his death, spoke of patriotism as "marking but a transitory stage in humanity's progress."

The prophets of an enlightened internationalism and even the social engineers, if you can call them that, who have worked toward the realization of an enlightened internationalism, have sometimes been people of importance. Take, for instance, M. Jean Finot, who edits La Revue. He not only ridiculed the separatism of nations, he went the whole goat, so to speak, and ridiculed the separatism of races. To him there were no races, there was humanity. By way of demonstrating the absurdity of racial antagonism, he assembled in Paris a "congress of races." Whites, blacks, yellows, and browns repealed ethnology and united in universal brotherhood.

Or take the promoters of aeronautics in Europe. They were charming fellows socially and men of distinguished talents. They boasted that by mastering the air they would abolish frontiers. Still again, take the dreamers who strove for a universal language. Savants and accomplished literary men hoped to break down international barriers by encouraging the spread of Volapuk or Esperanto or, more recently, Ro. Finally there were the practical idealists who managed the exchange of children. Little Marcel would spend a year with the Haumsteins at Bonn. Little Heinrich Haumstein would spend that year with Marcel's parents at Bordeaux. Marcel would return to France in love with Germany. Heinrich would return to Germany in love with France.

IT is clear, moreover, that the natural drift of things was in many respects toward internationalism. Travel increased. With the growth of wealth it became more and more common for people to live outside their own countries. Emigration increased, and with it the return of larger and larger multitudes who had gained an understanding of a race not their own and were inclined to be friendly toward that race all their lives. It grew easier for young folks to study abroad; German universities, English universities, and the Latin quarter of Paris overflowed with foreigners, while every American college had its European, not to say its Asiatic, contingent.

International marriages became more frequent; here they involved the very rich or the poor; in Europe they involved the middle class—like as not the wife of a merchant in the Rue Vaugirard is English, or Swiss, or Italian. There was an additional internationalizing influence in international scientific congresses, international athletic meets, international trade powwows, international religious conferences, international expositions, and the campaign for international arbitration. Meanwhile imperialism was snuffing out small nations.

But behold the tremendous development of nationalism that accompanied the development of internationalism! Politically it produced the Sinn Fein in Ireland, the nationalist parties in India and Egypt. Its social and artistic expressions marked a revival of the national spirit not only in squelched nations but in mere provinces. If Ireland had its Yeats, Provence had its Mistral. Brittany revived the Briton drama. Tiny peoples gloried anew in their distinctive dialects, their distinctive dress, their distinctive customs, their distinctive arts. In America the recrudescence of Germanism was fostered by the German imperial government; purely instinctive, however, was the impulse that made Boston Celts demand the teaching of Gaelic in the Boston public schools and made Jewish business men in Broadway dream of reassembling Israel in Palestine.

It was evident, moreover, that forces tending toward internationalism tended here and there to undo their own work. While travel favored internationalism theoretically, it often defeated internationalism practically. An occasional American came home from England an Anglomaniac; thousands came home from England laughing at the English. Every American who had visited Italy adored Italian scenery, Italian art, Italian architecture, but reserved the right to call Italy "the land of the flea and the home of the knave."

Foreigners in Paris made straight for Montmartre, and judged French character by the Moulin Rouge. And there was a steady market for the literature of ridicule and depreciation—"Innocents Abroad," for example, and "John Bull's Island." Plays lampooning foreign types excited limitless mirth, and it mattered little that the types lampooned had usually passed out of existence long before.

NOW a single joke will offset twenty international congresses, and it will not accomplish much to reply that the biggest joke ever foisted upon mankind is nationalism, though there are people who think so, not wholly without reason. Seriously, soberly, why is a nation?

Because of a common language? Belgium has two languages, Switzerland three, Russia a dozen. Because of a common religion? Look at America. It was here that a Frenchman exclaimed, "Mon Dieu! Fifty religions and only one gravy!" Because of a common ancestry? The Austro-Hungarian empire has ancestries without number, ancestries to throw at the birds.

The rejoinder to internationalism is not to be arrived at rationally. It is to be arrived at by taking a good look at the internationalists. Who and what are these "citizens of the universe," these fellows who hold themselves above patriotism, these dreamers who can live content in any country, are never homesick, and favor peace at any price? How do they behave? What are they like inside? Exploring their souls, what do you find—"citizens of the universe" or citizens of nowhere? Internationalists worthy the name or mere international slackers?

Hervé renounced internationalism the instant Germany attacked France. The same Socialists who had boasted that they would forestall a war by a general strike, military as well as industrial, throughout Europe, rushed to the colors. Inference: Either they had never been internationalists at heart or they lacked the spunk to stand by internationalism. It is fair to assume that their courage failed. Shadows of men, they let themselves be whipped into the very war they had sworn to prevent.

Paris, until August, 1914, was overrun with American expatriates. The majority had not become French. Who were they? What? As a rule they were all around slackers. They had tired of work at home. They had tired of responsibility. They were without strong affections. They never sighed for the land of their birth or for their friends there. Paris was to them a kind of Nirvana. They did not learn French. They had no interest in the French people. They had severed home ties, cheerfully, willingly, and formed no ties abroad. When the war broke out the majority packed up and cut for America, not joyfully, not with any thankfulness that necessity had forced their weak will to risk a reunion with friends and kin, but groaning because again they must face normal, responsible, human relationships.

LOOKED at closely, the man without patriotism is a defective. The citizen of the universe is a citizen of nowhere. The internationalist has something left out of him. He lacks the genius for strong attachment to places. He lacks the genius for strong attachment to people. Inferiority, not superiority, enables him to dream of a devotion to mankind that will exclude supreme devotion to any specific subdivision of mankind. It is easy to be devoted to mankind in general—nobody puts your devotion to the test—but it takes character to be devoted to a specific subdivision of mankind. At any moment the test may come.

Nothing could be more logical—taken in its theoretical expression—than internationalism. No nations, no wars. Peace on earth. Progress, sanity, ubiquitous sweetness and light. Nothing could be more ridiculous, more atrocious, than patriotism carried to its logical conclusion.

But every meritorious thing on earth becomes vicious when weirdly exaggerated, and, while nations are dangerous undeniably, nations happen. They happen not because it is rational that they should but because the human heart is so constituted that they cannot help happening.

Logically a man may prefer another country to his own. Logically a man may assert that all the world is his country. Logically a man may find nothing touching in the strains of "Home—home—sweet, sweet home!" Logically he may discover nothing tender in his recollections of the farm where he spent his childhood, the familiar roads, the old swimming hole, the scenes of boyish pranks, boyish struggles, boyish heartbreaks. Logically he may argue that a love for humanity in bulk is a finer, nobler thing than a love for humanity in detail. Logically he may tell you you should have the same affection for other babes as for the cherub on your knee. So you ought—in theory. In practice, when the practice involves real people, the feeling for home and kin infinitely outglows the feeling for "humanity."

WHAT is patriotism? An abstraction? A principle? A dogma expressed in symbols—the flag, a steel engraving of Lincoln, the dome of the capitol at Washington, cheers on the Fourth of July, standing up when a band plays "The Star Spangled Banner"? At bottom it is an affair of the heart. It is love—love of home, love of one's own people. Those boys in khaki are defending democracy. Granted. They are defending American institutions. Again granted. But when the regiments march by and you cheer, and when the flag passes and you pull off your hat and hold it over your heart, what is it that thrills you through and through and brings an ache in your throat and a mist before your eyes? An abstraction? A principle? A dogma? No, a blinding realization that the daring and the sacrifice and the magnificent devotion are for you—you individually—you personally—you!

For you those boys are going out to brave the squalor and misery and abominations of the trenches. For you they are going out to brave the chance of mutilation and maybe death itself. For you! For you, in order that the land you hold inexpressibly dear may be shielded against profanation. For you in order that your honor, your pride, your safety, your freedom—all you are and all you hope to be—your very self—may be shielded against the ambitions of a hostile foreign prince.

"Loyally they serve you," says an inscription on Mr. Reid's picture in Michigan avenue. You collectively? Of course. But at the same time you one by one. You individually. You personally. You because of a great love. Greater love hath no man. Emotionally this is the biggest thing—the most stirring, the most tremendous—that has happened to us in all our days. It goes down into the very depths of our souls. It explains the shuddering, dazed wonder a man feels when he looks a soldier in the eyes. Inwardly he is saying, "Who am I, and what have I ever done, that that boy should venture all this for me?"

Wasted Gasoline More Than Enough to Win the War

By Alfred Reeves.

[General Manager of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.]

If we can save two-thirds of all the gasoline now wasted in the United States there will be no shortage of motor fuel and the war needs of our army and navy will be amply provided for. This is the sum and substance of the "don't waste gasoline" campaign which has been organized by the Council of National Defense, the petroleum division of the United States bureau of mines, and the automobile manufacturers of the country.

There is a big opportunity for motorists to show not only their patriotism but their good judgment in supporting such a movement. It is the one certain way to insure a sufficient supply of fuel for our part in the war.

According to the estimate of the bureau of mines 959,000 gallons of gasoline a day will be required for the use of army, navy, and aeronautical operations during the coming year. The total daily gasoline production is 6,849,900 gallons.

There are 4,212,000 motor vehicles running in the country, of which approximately 400,000 are trucks. There are 27,800 dealers and 25,500 garages.

Of the 6,849,000 gallons produced daily approximately 4,800,000 gallons are used by motor cars and trucks, while the rest is used by motor boats and stationary engines, in cleaning, and in other industries.

The bureau of mines estimates that the following savings can be effected daily:

	Gals.
Tank wagon losses	7,200
Leaky carburetors, average 1-17th of a pint per car	31,400
Poorly adjusted carburetors, ½ pint per car	240,000
Motors running idle, ¼ pint per car	150,000
Wasted in garages, 10 pints each	67,000
Possible saving by using kerosene in garages	108,000
Needless use of passenger cars, 1⅜ pints per car	897,400

This makes a total of about 1,500,000 gallons a day, or 561,000,000 gallons a year, whereas our war needs are 350,000,000 gallons a year—less than two-thirds of what may be considered as wasted at the present time.

The very highest grade of gasoline is necessary for the thousands of airplanes now building, most of which will use the new Liberty motor, which is being assembled in great numbers in the automobile factories. Great quantities of gasoline will also be required to operate the thousands of army motor trucks to be used by our growing army.

On the other hand, the production of crude oil in this country has been increasing at a tremendous rate for a number of years, although during the last twelve months it has not quite kept pace with the demand, so that it has been necessary to use quantities of the reserve supply, which amounted to 164,580,000 barrels on July 1, 1917.

Coöperating with us in this movement are the American Automobile association, the organization of users; the Motor and Accessory manufacturers, including the motor and carburetor makers, and the Society of Automotive Engineers. Van H. Manning, chief of the petroleum division of the bureau of mines, is in direct charge of the undertaking.

Thousands of posters are being prepared to be hung in every automobile salesroom, garage, and gasoline supply station in the country. These posters will show graphically the quantity of gasoline produced daily, the quantities used in motor trucks and motor cars, and the quantities that can be saved in various ways.

To Admit Motorcycles.

Motorcycles will be admitted to Yosemite National park from now on, according to announcement by Secretary of the Interior Lane. Heretofore use of the roads has been denied to motorcycles within the park because the driveways have been considered dangerous for such traffic. Improvements in the roads, however, have made them safe, according to Secretary Lane.

SHOWING 'EM HOW

Lord Northcliffe (at the Left, Setting the Pace) and Henry Ford Till the Arid Wastes of Detroit with Ford Tractors.

After his recent visit to Chicago Lord Northcliffe went to Detroit, where he found Henry Ford engaged in his favorite pastime of trying out the new Ford farm tractor. The head of the British war commission said he didn't see why he couldn't drive one of the things, too, and proceeded to prove that he could. Funny how a photographer is always around at such moments, isn't it?

SAVE GAS!

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce's suggestions to motorists for conserving the gasoline supply were published in "The Tribune" several weeks ago, when the "don't waste" campaign was launched. A good thing bears repetition, however, so here they are again:

1. Store gasoline in underground steel tanks. Use wheeled steel tanks with measuring pump and hose. They prevent loss by fire, evaporation, and spilling.
2. Don't spill or expose gasoline to air—it evaporates rapidly and is dangerous.
3. Don't use gasoline for cleaning and washing—use kerosene or other materials to cut grease.
4. Stop all gasoline leakages. Form the habit of shutting off gas at tank or feed pipe.
5. Adjust brake bands so they do not drag. See that all bearings run freely.
6. Don't let engine run when car is standing. It is good for starter battery to be used frequently.
7. Have carburetors adjusted at service stations of carburetor or automobile companies—they will make ordinary adjustments without charge.
8. Keep needle valve clean and adjust carburetor (while engine is hot) to use as lean mixture as possible. A rich mixture fouls the engine and is wasteful.
9. Preheat air entering carburetor and keep radiator covered in cold weather—this will insure better vaporization.
10. See that spark is timed correctly with engine and drive with spark fully advanced—a late spark increases gas consumption.
11. Have a hot spark, keep plugs clean and spark points properly adjusted.
12. Avoid high speed. The average car is most economical at 15 to 25 miles an hour.
13. Don't accelerate and stop quickly—it wastes gas and wears out tires. Stop engine and coast long hills.
14. Cut down aimless and needless use of cars. Do a number of errands in one trip.
15. Know your mileage per gallon. Fill tank full and divide odometer mileage by gallons consumed.

Gas at the Curb.

So considerable has become the use of coal gas by motor trucks in England that curb filling stations have been erected along the main roads.

Take a Market Basket on That Tour Next Year

Automobile clubs throughout the United States are being asked to mobilize now to launch next year a big campaign to bring the motorist in close touch with the farmer, to put him in a position to purchase necessities direct from the fields without freight delays and at reduced cost. In many localities pathfinding cars are already mapping roads into the country, arteries that run to the heart of production.

Chicagoans have had their first real experience of this roadside marketing this fall. On a Sunday not long ago no less than eight farmers had stocks of tomatoes, beets, carrots, onions, peppers, and beans on display along the Milwaukee avenue road leading to Wheeling, and did a thriving business with the passing motorists.

A little girl from a school garden club began operations late in the summer. On her first Saturday she took in $33, and her sales for the next day, Sunday, amounted to $98. Another of the more prosperous merchants was a 10 year old boy.

The plan which congress is being asked to sanction is an automobile and motor truck collection system which would relieve the railroads. It incorporates the establishment of service bureaus in cities for the benefit of the man with an automobile and the citizen who may have one at his disposal. Information of what farmers have for sale will be distributed there and orders will be received for placement with farmers through rural postmasters.

More About Touring South.

Tampa, Fla., Nov. 13.—[Automobile Editor of The Tribune.]—I have just made the trip from Chicago to Tampa over the Jackson highway to Huntsville, then through Gadsden, Rome, and Atlanta, and over the Dixie highway the rest of the way.

Except for a piece of river road out of Huntsville, the road to Macon is fine, and there is no chance of trouble. One finds plenty of other cars along the way, and houses with phones always near.

In Florida, however, you will need a tow rope, and it is well to get one at Macon, together with a shovel and a machete or hatchet.

From Waycross to Jacksonville it is eighty miles, seventy miles of which is sand, sure to stick a car weighing more than 3,500 pounds loaded, and fine and deep. You will realize this is true when I say we pulled out two little Henrys.

Drivers here say the trail through Macon, Valdosta, Lake City, and either Jacksonville or Tampa is the best route, with only about five miles of sand, but plenty of clay which is slippery in wet weather. On the river road out of Huntsville there is a stretch of mud, but any good driver can always get through it.

You do not have to ship your car if you take the Valdosta road. R. P. B.

P. S.—Mr. Tom Webb writes entertainingly about the Waycross-Jacksonville road in his letter which you published last Sunday, but his ideas differ from mine. Probably he drove a high powered spedester and pushed it regardless of everything. My experience has to do more with family driving.

Petroleum Ether.

Chicago, Nov. 16.—[Automobile Editor of The Tribune.]—In his article last Sunday High Speed refers to petroleum ether as a good primer for winter use and says it "may be secured from your local pany." I have tried repeatedly to some but am invariably told it is on the market. I. W.

Quite right. High Speed permitted to fall into an error that mon among motoring experts. ether would be excellent for priming could get it, but so far as the torist is concerned it simply is had.

Dr. W. M. Burton of the Standard pany explains that it is the taken off in distilling petroleum volatile that it can be kept only in condition. Moreover, so little of it tained that there is only enough for of a few laboratories that need it work.

Casing head gasoline, which answers the purpose almost as well sometimes to be had, though even hrad to get. Many motorists any ordinary high test gasoline tory for priming purposes.

Tire Costs and Tire Values

YOU can't figure the real cost of a tire until its life is over. Many a tire that's cheap at the start is mighty expensive in the long run. And sometimes a high-priced tire is worth all the money you pay for it.

But Mason Tires are popular priced at the start; and at the finish—well, every Mason Tire that's sold is made with the sole purpose of proving that Mason Means More Mileage.

The speedometer tells the Mason story of quality materials and skilled craftsmanship—that's why it's "Once you equip with Mason's, you'll always equip with Mason's."

Petroleum Ether.

Chicago, Nov. 16.—[Automobile Editor of The Tribune.]—In his article of last Sunday High Speed refers to petroleum ether as a good primer for winter use and says it "may generally be secured from your local oil company." I have tried repeatedly to get some but am invariably told it is not on the market. J. W.

Quite right. High Speed permitted himself to fall into an error that seems to be common among motoring experts. Petroleum ether would be excellent for priming if one could get it, but so far as the average motorist is concerned it simply is not to be had.

Dr. W. M. Burton of the Standard Oil company explains that it is the first thing taken off in distilling petroleum and is so volatile that it can be kept only in a chilled condition. Moreover, so little of it is obtained that there is only enough for the use of a few laboratories that need it in research work.

Casing head gasoline, which is high test, answers the purpose almost as well and is sometimes to be had, though even this is hrad to get. Many motorists maintain that any ordinary high test gasoline is satisfactory for priming purposes.

By and About the Folks Who Make 'Em and Sell 'Em

THE Japanese are beginning to appreciate the advantages of owning automobiles, according to Y. Sugita, a University of Chicago graduate who is now selling Overlands at Osaka, but the dealers have their troubles. For one thing, the houses are built so close together in Japan that there is no room for garages, and whenever a car is sold the seller has to make arrangements for a place to keep it. Moreover, he has to contend with a law which forbids a Japanese to drive a car unless he has a chauffeur's license. A man must be a skilled driver before he can get this permit. Mr. Sugita's firm has solved the problem by building a large garage to house the cars they sell and maintaining a corps of chauffeurs to man them when the owners want to ride.

An unexpected change in the management of another big manufacturing concern comes in the announcement that Otis C. Friend has resigned as president of the Mitchell Motors company at Racine, Wis., and will be succeeded Dec. 1 by D. C. Durland, for the last twenty-three years identified with the enterprises of the General Electric company. Even more surprising to those who keep in touch with factory affairs is the word that R. C. Rueschaw is no longer sales manager of the Reo Motor Car company, going to the Mitchell concern as vice president. Mr. Rueschaw has been a Reo man since 1905.

Harry Newman tells of two Maxwell cars which were recently driven a total of 10,000 miles at an expense of only 50 cents for repairs. One owner, a Wenatchee, Wash., man, covered 5,088 miles on a trip east, in the course of which he was caught in a mountain snowstorm which put a 35 cent truss rod out of commission and made it necessary to pay a mechanic 15 cents to tighten the steering gear. The other car was driven from Lima, O., to various points in the far west for a total of 4,400 miles with no repair cost whatever.

As an indication of the increasing popularity of the inclosed car, the builders of the Franklin announce that 25 per cent of their production for the 1918 season will be of this type. The first inclosed Franklin was built in 1907, but its makers' experience has been that the idea of a closed car to be driven by any one other than a chauffeur did not become generally popular until 1914.

Word of a novel test of the leak-proof qualities of the Kissel "all year" car comes to Harry P. Branstetter, the Chicago distributor. One of the cars, with a removable top, was placed under a battery of sprinklers so arranged that the water hit the car as it would in a rainstorm. The test was continued sixteen hours a day for eight days, at the end of which an examining committee reported the inside to be "absolutely dry, with no indication of a leak."

Hard times note: One of the largest day's sales of motor carriages in the annals of the Packard Motor Car company was that reported on Tuesday, Oct. 30, when by mail and telegraph there arrived orders for cars valued at somewhat more than $1,000,000.

A new series of Hupmobiles was announced officially on Thursday. Special attention has been paid to the much discussed matter of fuel economy through devices for heating the air before it reaches the carburetor, further heating between carburetor and cylinders, adjustments for the leanest possible mixture and the assurance of a fat, hot spark at ordinary driving speeds.

The Elgin corporation's new factory building at Sixty-first street and Archer avenue was opened yesterday. It more than doubles the capacity of the Elgin plant, giving it a capacity of 100 cars a day. The structure is three and one-half blocks long and constitutes a notable addition to the enterprises which are gradually bringing Chicago back to a position of some importance as an automobile manufacturing center.

Hudson prices, it is announced, will be advanced Dec. 1. As indicated in these columns recently, the increase will range from $200 to $300, according to the type of body.

To W. G. Tennant of the Tennant Oakland company, Chief Engineer A. C. Hamilton of the Oakland factory writes of a contest for quick getaway staged last week by six cars built in Pontiac, Mich., and Detroit. The Oakland, he says, won the competition by attaining thirty miles an hour in fifteen and one-half seconds with two passengers.

G. W. Stratton has severed active connection with the Harry Newman-Stratton company, of which he has been vice president, and will devote himself to the affairs of the G. W. Stratton company, builders of bodies for trucks, trailers, and taxicabs.

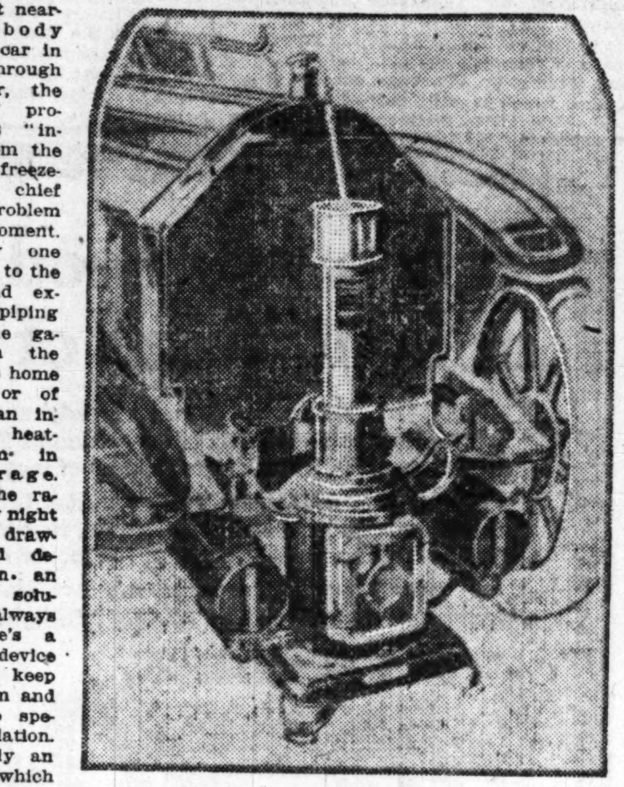
Tractor Show for Chicago?

Possibilities of a tractor exhibition in Chicago, to be held in the fall of 1918, were announced last week at a meeting of the directors of the National Exposition for Ford Accessories. If the show is held it probably will be in connection with the accessories exhibit.

Reports on the Ford show held at the Coliseum in September showed a total attendance of more than 50,000. The affair made a profit, but instead of declaring a dividend the directors voted to hold the surplus funds as working capital. H. C. Buelow, who staged the show, has been retained as manager for next season.

The LITTLE THINGS THAT HELP

Fighting Cold.



Now that nearly everybody keeps the car in service through the winter, the matter of protecting its "innards" from the perils of a freeze-up is the chief motoring problem of the moment. Not every one cares to go to the trouble and expense of piping heat to the garage from the plant in his home basement, or of installing an independent heating system in the garage. Draining the radiator every night has its drawbacks, and depending on an anti-freeze solution is not always safe. Here's a novel little device which will keep things warm and requires no special installation. It is simply an oil heater which circulates hot water through the radiator, connecting with the cooling system at two points—the filler opening and the drain cock. The contraption is light and compact, and is provided with handles so that it can be moved easily. Its makers claim that it will leave your engine ready to start on the coldest morning. The price is $35.

A Gauge for Fords.

Ford owners who are tired of using a stick to measure their gasoline can buy a regular gauge with a pointer and circular dial for $1.50. The device screws into the filler opening on the tank, through the tank cover, and is so arranged that it is not necessary to remove the gauge when the tank is filled. A little float of simple construction moves in contact with a vertical rod in such a way as to turn the indicating pointer as it rises or falls.

For Engine Trouble.

An improvement on the screwdriver or pet cock method of locating weak or missing cylinders is offered in a "motor tester," consisting of a combination of electric cables flexibly connected to one end of a central member, which has at its other end an attachment for making a ground connection. With this any number of the engine's cylinders may be cut out of operation and held until the working condition of the cylinder left is thoroughly noted. The outfit is small enough to be carried in the hip pocket and costs from $2 to $4.75, according to the number of cylinders.

Records Blame Victim in Many Auto Accidents

AN exhaustive investigation of all facts connected with the more serious motor vehicle accidents in Massachusetts during the last eight or nine years has been made by the state highway commission, which employed trained investigators for the purpose. Six investigators spent two weeks making a careful study of 675 selected cases of serious accidents and compiled a report, which has just been issued. As a result, the commission makes the following statements:

"The public has many erroneous ideas as to what causes automobile accidents. . . . The impression gets abroad that most of the accidents are caused by reckless or drunken operators running at excessive speeds and that many operators are never caught. These impressions are not correct, in fact, in any large proportion of the accidents.

"Out of the 675 cases examined the operators were believed to be intoxicated in forty-two instances only, or in just about 6 per cent.

"Women are unusually careful operators, being involved in only 4 per cent of all the accidents, although they constitute about 8 per cent of the licensed operators. They were held 'not at fault' in seven out of eight fatal accidents.

"In the 265 cases in which 243 pedestrians and twenty-two others were killed, the pedestrian or other user of the highway was wholly at fault in 162 and partly to blame in forty-three. The operator was wholly at fault in fifty-one cases and partly to blame in forty-three.

"Two hundred and five deaths out of 265 would not have occurred if reasonable care had been exercised by the deceased. In more than half of all the cases in which pedestrians and other users of the highway outside of the motor vehicle were either killed or injured the accident would not have occurred if the ordinary precaution had been taken of looking before crossing."

New York city, it is said, enforces vehicular regulation more stringently and efficiently than any other city in the country, yet after years of study of the problem its annual municipal report says:

"Should a law be passed giving the police some control of the movements of pedestrians, and should the enforcement of the law be supported by a proper public sentiment, it is quite likely that not only will the increase in street accidents be checked but that a decrease in the present number may be accomplished."

QUESTIONS and ANSWERS by HIGH SPEED

What is the best route to follow between Chicago and Camp Grant, Rockford? Would not this route be of enough interest to your readers to publish? W. F., Chicago.

The best route was published in "The Tribune" of Sunday, Sept. 16, together with a map. Since then condensed directions have been printed several times. The roads between Chicago and Rockford are all pretty poor, and those who travel them must expect some rough riding before they reach their destination. After trying various routes I am of the opinion that the best one is via Jackson boulevard, Garfield park, Washington boulevard, Austin avenue, Madison street, Ninth avenue, St. Charles street and St. Charles road, thence through Elmhurst, Lombard, North Glen Ellyn, St. Charles, Wasco, Lily lake, Virgil, Richardson, Sycamora, Genoa, and Belvidere. The orange and white markings of the Burlington way may be followed from Sycamore to Belvidere. The distance to Rockford is 91.8 miles. Camp Grant is located about five miles south of the city, on the east bank of the Rock river. From State and Main streets go southeast in State street across the river to Third street. Here turn right into Kishwaukee street, which is a concrete highway leading into the camp.

I wish to drive from Chicago to Denver, Colo., and as I am desirous of following the Lincoln highway would like to know if that route runs through to my destination. What is the total distance? A. O. J., Chicago.

The Lincoln highway does not touch Denver, but runs just outside the northern boundary of Colorado. The route runs through Clinton, 148 miles; Cedar Rapids, 91 miles; Marshalltown, 77 miles; Omaha, 219 miles; Grand Island, 151 miles, and Big Spring, 77 miles. Here the Lincoln highway continues west, while the Denver route goes south through Fort Morgan, 124 miles, to Denver, 115 miles. The total distance is 1,164 miles.

Kindly explain why it is that gasoline runs in a stream from the carburetor of my car after the motor has been shut off. How may the trouble be remedied? Do you imagine the carburetor is worn out? A. A. E., Ontarioville, Ill.

This is likely to happen with any carburetor, and I do not think you need go to the expense of buying a new one. It is caused by unexaporated gasoline, formerly held up by suction in the manifold, running back when the suction stops. Try wrapping the inlet manifold with asbestos cord. This will tend to warm it up and may possibly stop the trouble.

I am told there is a set of cards bearing maps of the several sections of the route between this city and Los Angeles, together with mileages and other information of value. Can you tell me where these cards may be obtained and also how much they cost? TRAVELER, Chicago.

Address Automobile club of Southern California, Los Angeles, Cal. I am informed there is no charge for the set of card maps.

One Good Reason for Battery Care

Every year more and more cars depend on the battery for ignition.

This is one of the greatest testimonials to the Willard dependability.

It's also a big reason for preserving that dependability by proper care of the battery.

For if the spark fails there's "nothing doing."

If the starter fails, you can use the crank. If a lamp burns out you can replace it. But if the battery fails it means, "get a rope."

It's our business to help you avoid that possibility and with Willard quality and Willard Service it's easy.

Stop in and we'll put you wise.

WHEN wintry winds come sniffling about the door cracks of the Flivver bungalows and the supply man down the street puts up the "Buy Your Winter Bodies" sign, most cars that I know turn bear for the winter and begin to hibernate. Their owners jack them up and begin taking the batteries down to old Doc Hydrometer's battery boarding house for the annual vacations.

Not so with old Yellow Eyes, companion of my Wanderlust. In this season, when many machines are being packed away, Yellow Eyes is doing yeoman service. One might almost say that when the other cars are being bundled up in lavender and rue, our friend and familiar is just coming out. Certain it is that from November to the ides of March this car rolls up as great a mileage as in almost twice as many months of brighter days.

That's because the car is equipped for comfort to itself and to its occupants and winter has no terror for those who ride in this particular chariot of kings. In fact, from little daughter, who wants to drive, up past mamma, who drives sometimes, to papa, who drives the whole family, it is agreed that winter's the time when a car's most useful.

All this might be beside the mark in the case of a car that called a heated garage home, and had its own man to look after it, but these remarks appertain to the home kept car; habitat, the suburbs; home, the lone garage in the back lot.

They apply, however, to many city bred cars, for most every autoist has had the job of starting a cold blooded, reluctant car after it has stood outside a theater for three hours acquiring pneumonia and stubbornness. They apply doubly to madame, who now is seen so much a-driving on the streets, for, like the electric gear shift, the little extras described here put within reach of a woman's strength things that often have made strong men weep. The little extras are the cures, stated in one, two, three order, for the troubles listed in the following table.

All these cures are simple enough and are within reach of every one, and it is hard to understand why practically every owner-driver does not adopt them one and all. If this setting forth of their advantages and low cost to one who has used them all on his "eight" of 1915 enables a few hundred more drivers to motor this winter in comfort instead of in torture the writer is well repaid.

There are two parts to the story, of which the first applies to the W. K. Everyman's car.

Beginning forward, we come to the electric starter and the crank handle, two devices that are marvels of promptness when the perspiration drips off one's receding forehead, but are marvels of contrariness when the alcohol is in the water system and the thin arctic pole oil is in the reservoir.

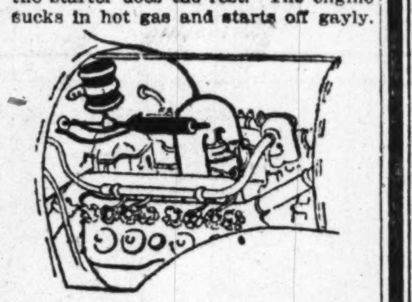
Most men know that thrill that comes from pressing the electric starter time after time without hearing an answering chug. All the rest know what it is to almost turn a flivver over in trying to "bulldog" its congealed gasoline into gasifying. One instruction book I read said the thing to do was to turn her over until the friction in the cylinders and the compression should heat up a charge sufficiently to vaporize the half frozen spray that came from the carburetor.

Fancy that, after a breakfast of cereal, steak, eggs, and flapjacks, up by Glencoe's chilliest hill about 6 o'clock of the morning after the blizzard. Nuf said!

The remedy lies best in an electric primer, although one or two makers equip cars with spray primers that seem to work. However, the electric kind does for me.

There are two makes on the market, both efficient so far as I know. Both run chilled gasoline through a tube that is surrounded by an electric heating coil, which warms the gas to boiling point and delivers a hot summer charge right to the spark plug in deadest winter.

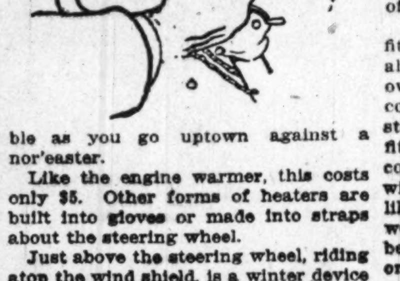
In my own installation on one side of an eight I turn a handle at the cowl board and let it stand a minute for the electricity from the battery to heat the coil, then another half turn admits gas to the hot coil and a pressure on the starter does the rest. The engine sucks in hot gas and starts off gayly.



It will even run a little on this heated gas, which is delivered right at the manifold and so can't get cooled off.

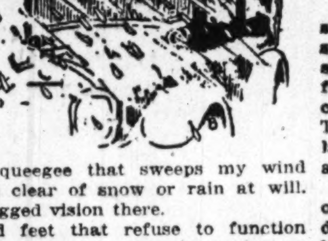
The gas comes from the vacuum tank in this case. The other make of coil gets gas from a funnel on the cowl board into which the operator pours a spoonful of Rockefeller spirit. Both systems get their electricity from the storage battery and so prabably would be valueless on a Ford that had no electric starter. The cost is $5, while if one runs his battery down trying to start a chilled motor the electrician's bill will be more than that.

Allied to this device as a winter comfort is the hand warmer, also operated from the battery, and in my case laced to the steering wheel. An efficient warming coil is under a brass plate that is partly protected by leather. Soon after the battery current is turned into it numb hands come to life, and that difficult steering through rutted and frozen snow is once more possible as you go uptown against a nor'easter.



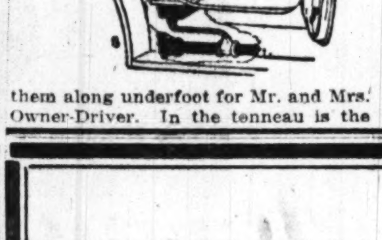
Like the engine warmer, this costs only $5. Other forms of heaters are built into gloves or made into straps about the steering wheel.

Just above the steering wheel, riding atop the wind shield, is a winter device that costs only $1.25, but which I would not do without. It is a window cleaner—a squeegee that sweeps my wind shield clear of snow or rain at will. No fogged vision there.



Cold feet that refuse to function quickly on brake or clutch are just as apt to lead one into the damages court as marble hands or blindfolded eyes, so a foot warmer is both a comfort and a safeguard. I use with satisfaction a flat type that sets on the boards or carpets without cutting them to pieces, yet furnishes foot warmth for our party of five, but is never in the way.

In the driving compartment is one of cast iron, cost $10, that draws hot gases from an exhaust pipe and runs them along underfoot for Mr. and Mrs. Owner-Driver. In the tenneau is the same device in aluminum, cost $15, with the same heat arrangement. As this is farther from the engine than the one forward, the superior heat radiating qualities of aluminum use the smaller amount of heat that reaches it to good advantage.



Of course, drivers of fours and sixes can't have two heaters, at least I believe not, because they have only one exhaust. The ability to have two heaters is one advantage of the eight and the twelve that even the best salesman of sixes won't claim he can surpass.

The second part of the story will not fit Everyman's car, but it will apply to all touring cars and roadsters whose owners would like to enjoy closed car comforts but aren't able to find or to store separate winter tops. It will not fit the man who has folding or accordion plaited curtains nor the chap with a '17 model and curtains that open like doors. The devices described here were put on a car in the winter of 1915, before these newfangled curtains came on the market, and they achieve the same effect at a net cost of less than $1.

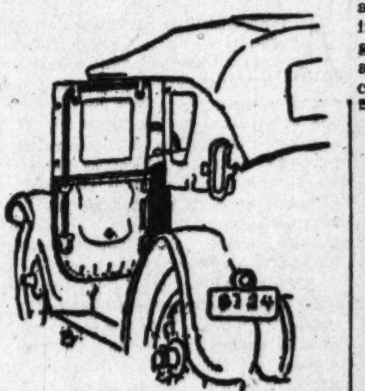
Any one with a touring car or runabout with curtains in sections can make a near-inclosed car by the following means:

For each door to be equipped one should buy at some large hardware store one set of the long wire type of screen door spring. It consists of a four foot straight rod of spring steel cut to a triangular section at each end. These triangular ends fit into triangular sockets that are screwed to casing and to door when it is used on screens.

For using it on a car one screws one of these sockets to the inner face of a door, eight or ten inches straight down below the lock. One triangular end of the rod is inserted and the rod thrusts upright, parallel with the outer edge of the door and just a little inside of it. One secures it at the top of the door in such a position that it won't interfere with the lock by slipping over it a small hinge-like holder that comes in the set and screwing the holder against the door. The rod now is securely held against side sway by the two irons and is supported by the socket.

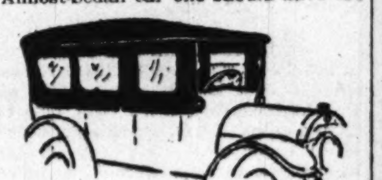
One now marks the rod at a point about one inch below the side of the top when up and marks it on the side toward the hinge of the door. Next take the rod from position and, first putting it in a vise, bend it back on the marked side until it makes a sharp right angle, or such an angle as will make the bent down section run parallel to the bottom of the side of the top, and, of course, near to it. One has now an angle support for the door curtain, a support that can be removed in two minutes and put away under seats, or can be installed in the same length of time.

Remains to hang the curtain. The rod will usually run outside of and above even a large celluloid panel, but even if it crosses the opening a little it will do no harm. Two supports are needed for the curtain, both on the inside. One is placed at the angle of the iron, acting both to hold up the curtain and to prevent it from working back. The other is put near the free end of the rod. I use sets of glove fasteners in tabs of leather sewed to the curtain. Snapping the fasteners over the rod makes a sort of loop that hangs the curtain. All sectional curtains are cut so as to lend themselves to this arrangement.



The curtains are left buttoned constantly on the sides opposite the rod. When the owner wants a tight closed car he buttons up his curtains just as he did formerly, the rod holding them in position for him. Whenever he wants a door, unbuttoning at two places makes a door available.

For a final touch to produce the Almost-Sedan car one should have the old style curtains with their small windows recut to put in large panels of celluloid. One can thus, at an expense of about $6 to $8, transform a dark, dreary car of the see-nothing variety into a light, cheerful vehicle with as fine an outlook as that enjoyed by the fellow in the Rolling Royce that just went by.



And after one has made a few excursions around Michigan avenue and Congress street of a stormy opera night one can believe that the big celluloid windows are a valuable investment as an insurance as well as a comfort.

It seems almost unnecessary to state that this fiery steed of the winter snows has a blanket over his breathing apparatus, an adjustable felt-lined blanket that shuts out enough cold air to keep old Yellow Eyes from grunting and coughing too long before he gets warmed up. That and absence of a fan, which is disconnected in the cold spells, and a thermometer at the radiator cap, serve one efficiently for keeping the skittish steed warm enough for proper action.

Then there's a motor tire pump to take a lazy man's place at the worst of all winter jobs—tire pumping in the icy slush. Of course, that only comes when one gets the fatal second puncture, and one does the best one can to guard against that by riding on cords. Still, even the kaiser suffered the second puncture.

For Pitted Valves.

The owner who does his own work on the car will find that valves which are pitted may be easily and quickly refitted by having a local garage or machine shop cut a new face, a lathe being used for this purpose. This is a matter of a scant few minutes' work, whereas grinding [illegible] the face is clear may mean hours of tiring work.

How to Become a Star Salesman

How to Earn $2,500 to $10,000 a year.

By J. P. BURNHAM.

A new type of salesman is rapidly coming to the fore in modern business. Today business recognizes that salesmanship is a science—that the man who can sell paint or bonds or real estate or clothing can sell sewing machine supplies or tooth paste or groceries or anything else.

It is well known that certain fundamental principles underlie every sale. Human nature is always the same.

A star salesman can switch lines completely, and still be a star salesman from the first day he goes out. He knows the game of selling.

That it is not necessary for a man to "work his way up" to the position of salesman, and proof that failures and poorly paid workers in other lines can develop this star salesmanship ability, has been demonstrated in thousands of cases.

Men Who Make Good

A young man in San Francisco, who was formerly a carpenter, is now in the $5,000 a year class as a salesman. A former $15 a week clerk in Chicago is now selling goods to many of the largest firms in the United States, and has earned more than $100 a day. Last year a man in Dayton, O., earned $800 as a clerk. This year he has earned $6,500 as a salesman and was recently promoted to sales manager.

A printer in Chicago decided he would stop trying to get ahead in a crowded field where salary possibilities are limited. He was convinced that salesmen are made—not born—and after studying the principles of scientific salesmanship he launched out and secured a position paying him $2,500 a year, with every prospect of increased earnings as he goes on.

In Hanford, Cal., is a man who worked at anything he could get to do—and as he says, "was out of work half the time." He turned to salesmanship and has earned as high as $450 in one month. A man in Kansas City, over 60 years old, decided he would work with his head instead of with his hands. He turned to salesmanship as offering the greatest opportunities for advancement, and earned $200 a month as a result. An office clerk in Chicago, working at an office clerk's salary, jumped to earnings of $3,000 a year in a remarkably short time after having studied scientific salesmanship.

These are but a few of thousands of similar instances of how men learn to sell goods by mastering the basic principles of salesmanship. It does not matter what they are asked to sell—they know their profession as well as the lawyer knows his—and as the lawyer applies his knowledge to the various cases that come to him, so the salesman applies his knowledge to the selling problem in front of him.

How to Master Selling

All of the instances cited here are the result of studying the home study course in Scientific Salesmanship issued by the National Salesmen's Training Association. Instruction, which is of the highest order, is given by mail, and the results border on the miraculous. In an amazing short time any one can learn every detail of successfully selling any line of merchandise.

A feature of the Association's work is the free employment bureau, which secures positions for members without charge while they are learning.

Remarkable Book Free

The Association has issued a remarkable book, which will be sent free, on request, to every one who is dissatisfied with their present position, together with a list of lines in which positions are open. Regardless of how impossible you may think it is for you to become a successful salesman, write for this book and list today. Read how others with no greater advantages than your own have succeeded in earning $2,500, $3,000, even up to $10,000 a year. Read about the thousands of concerns who write in asking for the "National" type of salesman.

The Association is now more than ten years old, and has already trained thousands of successful men, who never before sold a dollar's worth of goods. In addition, thousands of men who have spent years in selling merchandise have taken the course with the greatest profit.

Regardless of your present position in life, you owe it to yourself to at least write for the 64-page book and "list of openings" offered by the Association or call at their offices for a copy. It tells everything you want to know about the opportunities in salesmanship for you, about the amazing system of instruction and what N. S. T. A. Training and Service have meant to thousands of others.

Do not wait until tomorrow, for you may miss the greatest opportunity of your life. Send a post card or letter right NOW—or tear out this advertisement and call at their Chicago headquarters and let them explain the service in detail. Their address is NATIONAL SALESMEN'S TRAINING ASSOCIATION, Suite 440-C Monadnock Blk., Chicago, Ill. Branches at New York and San Francisco.

Confusion of Peace Terms

By Gilbert Seldes

LONDON.—The most significant sign of the great peace push is the formation in most of the allied countries of strong, capable and powerful anti-peace groups. In personnel these groups can hardly be distinguished from many earlier groups of men who believed that the war must be carried on vigorously until Germany is decisively beaten. The significant thing is that within the last few months they have rearranged and reorganized themselves, have moved from an easy defensive position against the minor pacifists to a strong offensive position against moderates and converts of every description.

The new name for these groups is "jusqauboutists" (from the French words "jusqu'au bout," the war meaning of which is "to the bitter end"). The jusqauboutists cut across party lines; they include judges, patriots and lovers of humanity, Socialists, Liberals and Conservatives.

Sir Edward Carson, Horatio Bottomley, Mr. Asquith, G. K. Chesterton, Robert Blatchford, and H. M. Hyndman are queer bedfellows, but they are all jusqauboutists and each is in his own way carrying on a battle against the warriors for a present peace. The battle extends to every country and is becoming increasingly desperate. In France it has only just been checked by the exposure of a particularly open bit of pacifist propaganda; in England the agitation cannot be called pacifist.

The struggle between the jusqauboutists and their opponents is at the root of the whole confusion of peace terms which prevails in Europe today. Examine all the peace programs from that of President Wilson (as in the address to the senate) to that of the pope; examine official replies and private responses. You will find that at bottom the great difference of opinion is not as to the terms of peace but as to the advisability of offering terms at all.

The danger of a premature peace (in the eyes of the bitter-enders and their supporters) is great. In their opinion the expressions of President Wilson are tragically perilous; the more violent among them consider that his attempt to save the German people will result in nothing but the salvation of the German junkers, far as that is from the president's intention. Their propaganda and the reasons for it, now being vigorously pushed before the people of England is, in sum, as follows:

The aim of the coming peace is to prevent the recurrence of war; if not of all war, at least of such a war as this one. The purpose of the peacemakers must be to lay down such fundamental terms as will satisfy the peoples of the world. In fine, the first term must be punishment of the offender. The fact that the allies are at war makes them the judges of the offense.

The terms of peace must therefore be such as to persuade all other nations that no nation can provoke war, can carry on war as Germany has done, without punishment. It is not necesary for punishment to take the form of indemnities, economic boycott, or loss of territory. The punishment which will be a warning and the one which will meet the case lies in a military defeat for the criminal aggressor.

If we fail to carry our warfare to this end, say the jusquaboutists, we will insure the continuance of the appeal to arms, not merely between nations but between classes within any one country. The moral authority of the world court cannot exist unless the world indicates its power and its willingness to punish the violator of its sacred principles.

To this the moderate reply is: You admit that a Germany must exist after the war. If you exclude her from your society of nations you will insure yourself an enemy and a war. You will compel Germany to become both strong and self-sufficing at the time when you are offering her a pretext for using her strength in war.

Instead of this we desire a league of nations, disarmament, freedom of intercourse between nations. You admit the desirability of these things. Yet you refuse to offer peace to Germany on condition that she accepts these things. You want to change her heart, yet you are hardening her in her stubborn way.

Because if you continue this war you will lose the self-control you now have. If you have to go on until you reach the Rhine you will be more than human if you do not ravage the Rhineland, lay indemnities, carve up Germany into her separate parts, and distribute them among yourselves. If you go on to the end you will find it exceedingly bitter, for yourselves and for Germany—for the world.

And meanwhile you are laying up a store of grievances at home which may wreck our entire civilization.

For three years the Jusquaboutists had no need of organization, for their enemies were only pacifists. Until a few months ago the magazine called the New Europe had to explain in almost every issue what its motto, "pour la victoire integrale" meant. Today the "integral victory," with its readjustment of Europe in accordance with the morality of the allies is a familiar phrase. On the one hand the bitterenders have lost such a stalwart champion as H. G. Wells; on the other, they have gained the strength of organization. Both sides realize now that this time the fight is on in earnest. If the bitterenders are not beaten now, before the winter is out, they will not be beaten at all.

Their chief strength really lies in the new strength of the allies. Whether the Russian imbroglio settles or not, the coming power of the United States cannot be minimized. The Jusquaboutists insist that the allies merely hold on until that force can be brought to bear.

The lines are drawn, and every individual in every country of the allies must take his side. Because the deciding factor is recognized to be public pressure. The question is: Do you want to offer Germany terms of peace now in the hope of winning another decent country to the community of western nations and at the risk of ruining all we have fought for? Or do you prefer to carry on the war in the hope of destroying German autocracy forever and at the risk of rearing a new Germany, more powerful than the old, to shake the world order again?

Miss Duffield, known among her "Miss Springtime" comrades as "the girl with the oriental orbs," comes of one of the oldest theatrical families in America. Her grandfather acted with Forrest, Davenport, and Charlotte Cushman. Her uncle, the veteran Harry Duffield, still active in the California picture studios, supported McCullough, Barrett, and Booth. Her aunt, Blanche Duffield, was the Yum-Yum in "The Mikado" performances of the all-star Gilbert and Sullivan repertoire, which included De Wolf Hopper and George MacFarlane, now singing the baritone rôle in "Miss Springtime" at the Illinois.

THE STAYERS

by Guy F. Lee

"Russia may mean another hill to climb. If Italy fails, it means just another hill. But America will win."—Henry P. Davison.

We've got a big job, my brothers,
A very big job, indeed.
A task that means we and others
Must suffer and mourn and bleed.
A job that will sap our millions,
A task that will stop our ease;
A job that will spend our billions;
A draught of the bitter lees!
But hark my advice, and grab it
And cry it in field and mart:
Americans have the habit
Of finishing what they start!

Hills? Yes, and oceans and mountains,
Far skies and bottomless pits;
Foul air and poisoned fountains,
The spleen of the foe's crazed wits.
But climb them, and fathom them, will we,
And though we are checked betime
Again and again and—still we Will fight and continue to climb.

Huns: hark my advice and grab it
And cry it in field and mart:
Americans have the habit
Of finishing what they start!

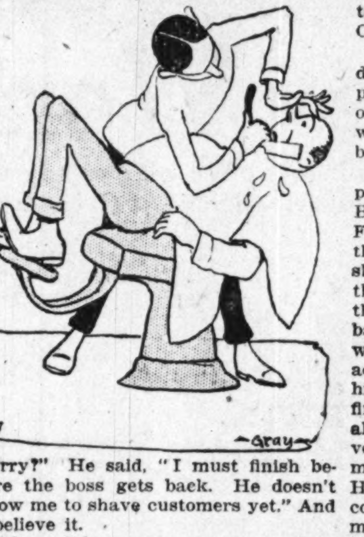
McVICKER'S.

Andrew Kelly: I just met a Boston "high brow," one of those guys who has tried to pour a six and seven-eights education into a five and three-eighths brain. He said, "Thou should have thy hirsute adornment removed from thy face." I said, "Come again, please." He said, "Here's a nickel. Get a shave."

So I went into a 5 cent barber shop. The barber shaved me so fast that I thought he was trying to break a record. So I says to him, "What's your hurry?" He said, "I must finish before the boss gets back. He doesn't allow me to shave customers yet." And I believe it.



After plying a razor over my face with the same delicacy of touch that a stone cutter would use in chiseling out a tombstone, the amateur barber said to me, "And what will you have on your face after I finish shaving you?" I said, "I'll be lucky if I still have my lips and part of my nose."

On account of the fashionable cut of my garments I am sometimes mistaken for a millionaire. Only the other day a spinster of very uncertain age approached me and said, "We're getting up a raffle for a poor tramp Won't you take a ticket?" "No mum," says I. I wouldn't know what to do with a poor tramp if I won him. One in the family is enough."

And yet I manage to extract a great deal of fun out of life. . . . The party was given by the "Friendly Sons of St. Patrick." I shudder to think what might have happened if they had been unfriendly.

I used to be an actor. I once appeared in a play called "The Iceman's Bride," or, "Warm Hearts but Cold Feet." I was supposed to elope with the bride, whereupon the husband shoots me. But the woman who played the bride was so excessively homely that, instead of shooting me, the husband should have rewarded me. He was supposed to shoot me in the third act. But one night the audience beat him to it and tried to shoot me in the first act. So I gave up being an actor—although I've always been a great favorite with the ladies, especially at matinées. They say I remind them of Henry Miller in his palmy days. Of course, the men like me, too—they say my face is very handy to strike matches on. But the ladies are the ones I try to please.

Automobiles Keep Men and Merchandise Moving

Railroads are strained to their limit today to supply transportation for man and merchandise.

The automobile has stepped into the breach, and is the second greatest factor in meeting the national need for more—more—more transportation.

You must keep your car fulfilling its part of the need,

—keep it ready day or night to do its part in your transportation service,

—keep its "feet" well shod,

—give it the tires that have stood, and are continuing to stand, the test of mileage,

—the tires that give low mileage cost and high anti-skid service.

Put United States 'Royal Cord' Tires on your car—make comparisons for yourself.

RIALTO.

Dorothy Kenton: In order to find out what the future had in store for me I just consulted a fortune teller. She said, "You will shortly marry a millionaire who will make you a princely allowance; two dollars, please." I said, "I'll pay you out of the allowance."

Next I went to a palm reader. She examined my hand very carefully and then remarked, "You are very economical in some things." I said, "In what, for instance?" She said, "Soap and water."

Well, if I'm economical with soap there's a reason. About a year ago, I was getting so stout that the doctor advised me to give up cakes of every description. So, of course, I also had to give up cakes of soap. I remember it very distinctly, because things were a little quiet in the theatrical business at the time. So I applied to a department store for a position as saleslady. I was referred to the superintendent. He said, "What reference can you give?" I said, "I have a letter of recommendation from my minister." He said, "That's very good as far as it goes, but we never require your services on Sunday. Have you any reference from anybody who knows you the other six days in the week?"

But anyhow I got the job. They put me in the sheet music department. I also had charge of the musical instruments. Just for a lark I ran a piece of Swiss cheese through the pianola and it sounded like a selection from Wagner. But next day I pressed my luck and tried it with a porous plaster. And I lost my job.

So I moved to a small town in Iowa and took up school teaching. One of the principal industries of that town was hog raising. One day a small boy marched up to my desk and said, "Would you like to buy a bit of pork? Father's going to kill a pig." I said, "Yes, I'd be glad to." But when several days passed and the boy said nothing more about it, I called him up to the desk and asked him why he hadn't brought the pork. "Because," said he, "the pig got well again."

The Milanos:

"Have you ever been on the firing line?"

"Sure; only last week my boss stood us all in line and I was the first one he fired."

"And were you ever rewarded for bravery?"

"O, yes."

"Did you get the iron cross?"

"No, but I got the maltese cross."

"How could you get the maltese cross?"

"I stepped on her tail."

"I understand you have been quite sick lately."

"Yes, I had exclamatory rheumatism."

"You mean inflammatory rheumatism. Exclamatory means to holler out."

"Well, that's it. I hollered out so loud that all the neighbors could hear me."

"Did you have rheumatism in the joints?"

"No, sir. The policemen have closed up all the joints."

"And how did you get cured?"

"The doctor gave me a powder, but it nearly killed me."

"Perhaps you didn't take it according to directions."

"O, yes, I did. The doctor told me to take every hour as much of the powder as would cover a silver dime."

"And did you carefully follow directions?"

"I did and I didn't."

"What do you mean, you did and you didn't?"

"Well, you see, I didn't have a dime, so I used two nickels."

THERE COMES A DAY WHEN THE young man takes command of his bark and begins to navigate it. Hitherto it has been steered by others—parents, teachers, friend. But now he is a free agent. No man can restrain him. HE HOLDS THE AWFUL POWER OF CHOICE. If he decides right, it is a stone in the structure of success and character. If he decides wrong, it is a stone about his neck, and never while the stars run in their course can the act be recalled and the mistake entirely rectified. Many are unable to decide; cannot determine what course is best. OUR SCIENTIFIC ANALYSIS DECIDES THESE QUESTIONS ACCURATELY for each man. Chicago's largest employers recognize the value of this work ad want our "certified" men. Consultation free. SCIENTIFIC VOCATIONAL COUNSELING BUREAU, 564-5, 608 S. Dearborn-st.

California.

FOR SALE—SMALL FARMS LOCATED IN best part of the San Joaquin Valley, California, every tract lying within two miles of a railway station. Near famous alfalfa and orchard lands of Stanislaus County, which yield an average income for the entire county of over $127 per acre. Two cases give an idea of what was done this year: A crop of sweet potatoes sold in the field without being dug for $300 an acre. A crop of beans grown between the rows of fruit trees in a six acre orchard was sold for over $160 an acre.

Price is $125 an acre. The owner sells five acres for $625, and gives a warranty deed with perfect title and a lease option contract for a period of five or ten years on fifteen acres additional, so that the owner of the five acres will have immediate possession of the entire twenty acres, can cultivate the same to crops, or improve it in any way he desires, and pay a nominal rental each year, or until his profits from the land justify him in canceling the lease option contract and taking a deed for the total acreage.

This plan makes it possible for a man with small capital to get a tract on which to build his home, and cultivate additional acreage in a way that it will pay for itself and make him the owner of a twenty acre improved farm within ten years without any further payment than that earned from the land.

For further information write to C. L. SEAGRAVES, Industrial Commissioner Santa Fe Ry., 1820 Railway Exchange, Chicago, Ill.

Louisiana.

FOR SALE—THE NEW ORLEANS GREAT Northern Railroad, for the first time in a systematic way, opens to homeseekers the splendid cutover lands along its lines in the rich states of Louisiana and Mississippi.

Hitherto, lumber being the chief asset, the land itself, regardless of its great agricultural worth, has been carried on the books at a mere nominal value, but as the lumber companies, pine tar product plants, and wood pulp paper mills are using up the trees, stumps, and waste wood on the logging fields, a large acreage near in to towns, churches, schools, and markets is available for trucking, dairying, and live stock farming, and the greatest inducements to settlers in prices, terms and co-operation are offered. In addition to our American settlers, a Scandinavian-American colony and a flourishing German-American colony are building up on our lines near Bogalusa, La. Numbers of families move down in November. Glad to refer you to members of these colonies.

Write Walter S. Ayres, Industrial Commissioner, N. O. G. N. Ry., 864 McCormick Bldg., Chicago, Ill., how to get a farm home or specially selected live stock ranch, directly through the railroad and from the owner.

'OVER THE TOP'

THIS WAR begins new times, in which the American farmer will be of more importance than ever before in history. The country today depends upon the American Farmer to furnish means for sending our boys "OVER THE TOP," and after that years will be required to refill the depleted storehouses of the world.

LANDLESS MEN, we are throwing open to the public 40,000 acres of sugar maple, elm, and beech lands in Kalkaska, Antrim, and Charlevoix Counties, Michigan. This land is considered the best new land in the United States. It produces fine crops of wheat, oats, rye, corn, clover, alfalfa, and all vegetables, such as potatoes, beans, peas, etc. It is also fine for stock, dairy, and poultry farming.

TAKE ADVANTAGE of our easy payment plan. Small down payment on 40 acres and small monthly payments on balance. Prices $18 to $30 per acre. If to "GET LAND" has been your ambition, now the door of opportunity is open, walk through and take your choice from 40,000 acres of the best land the sun ever smiled upon.

LIBERTY BONDS and land go hand in hand. Both help the government. In order to assist you in acquiring a farm home, thus further helping to win the war, we will take your Liberty bonds as down payment at a 10% premium to you.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS: If you give your life for your country the insurance clause in your contract provides we are to deed the land to anybody you name. WE will do our part. You do yours.

COME with us on our Pullman car excursion November 27th and verify these statements. New clubhouse with excellent accommodations for both men and women. Free auto rides over the lands. Write, phone, or call on us for our beautiful illustrated booklet describing in detail this wonderful country and its resources. Don't delay, but write today. REMEMBER, November 27th.

Texas.

FOR SALE—NEW FARM OPPORTUNITY IN A GREAT STATE.
A new SANTA FE line is tapping a fertile prairie section of Northwest Texas, near Oklahoma border, where many farmers have MADE GOOD with wheat, hogs, and live stock. HERE, if you ACT NOW, you can get first choice. You can get in AHEAD of the railway and the people whom the railway will bring.
Chance of a lifetime for a man of moderate means. A certain number of thrifty, farseeing farmers can acquire good land at an astonishingly low figure and on long, easy terms.
Why say good-by to good rent money every year when same money invested here will pay big returns and make you OWNER of a fine big farm?
A great railroad, like the Santa Fe, would only recommend what it considers a good thing; it wants to see new territory developed and wants newcomers to PROSPER and PRODUCE. Climate is pleasant, rainfall comes in growing season, winters are mild, stock can run in open year around. Schools, churches, telephones, good roads. Everything here but enough men with families.
The farmers' BEST CHANCE is on good low priced land raising products that bring big returns. Be one of the fortunate first comers to reap the advantages of a section inspected by a Santa Fe agricultural agent and pronounced RIGHT. Twenty-dollar-an-acre land here has made 26% YEARLY, compared with 6% on $150 land in Illinois and Iowa corn belt.
Write me for our free illustrated folder with particulars, giving experience of farmers now here and results achieved in short time on small capital.

Beware of concerns or individuals making an unwarranted use of the word—Victrola.
The Victrola is either a genuine Victrola or else it is simply an imitation.
Genuine Victrolas may be obtained from us for as low a price as $20. If you get a genuine Victrola you will never regret your purchase.
A genuine Victrola alone has the Victrola tone and is made only by the Victor Talking Machine Co.
Suitable monthly terms may be arranged.
We will gladly accept Liberty Bonds in payment.

Dan Canary

The Automobile Expert.

It Will Cost You Nothing

My expert advice is free for the asking.

If you are going to buy a new or used automobile, see me and I will save you money.

There is a most excellent reason. I have no connection with any manufacturer, or with any one make of car.

If you will give me five minutes of your time I can quickly convince you of the difference between the man who knows and the other fellow who thinks he knows.

If you are sick, you consult the BEST DOCTOR of known ability and reputation. If you have a question of law to be settled you consult the BEST POSTED LAWYER. If you are going to invest your money in stocks, bonds, or real estate you consult the BEST POSTED BROKER. If you are going to buy an automobile consult me—the BEST POSTED AUTOMOBILE MAN in CHICAGO.

SOMEWHERE AMONG THE READERS OF this great newspaper there is a man who can quality for the "Business Opportunity" I have to offer. This man has proved his sales ability; he puts up a good "front," he is a good talker, he understands business methods, and his experience qualifies him to take entire charge of a business; he has executive ability, willing to work himself, and knows how to get enthusiasm and loyalty from the salesmen he will employ. This man will be able to build up a sales organization and run it successfully. He has had selling experience in the automobile industry, preferably accessories. If he is personally acquainted with the big distributors and jobbers, he will be able to start much faster. He must have the reputation of being a live wire, and then prove it. The products you will handle are three motor car accessories, built in our own factory, protected by patents; others will be added to the line later. These three devices have passed the experimental stage; there are a number of them in successful use today. They are all big money savers for the car owner and in line with Hoover's economy program. If you can qualify you will be one of the company, if after you investigate you are willing to give it every minute of your time and every ounce of your enthusiasm, and in addition will buy a financial interest in the company, so that you will also share in the dividends which you will help earn. Our devices are well advertised and already have had a favorable introduction to the trade and consumer. In qualifying tell us all about yourself, giving your phone No. Address F L 583, Tribune.

Hog market at Chicago yesterday started steady to strong, but closed mostly 5c lower than on Friday, with about 3,000 hogs left unsold. Receipts were posted at 18,000 head, of which shippers took only 2,000. Top sales were made at $17.85 and the bulk at $17.40@17.75. Pigs were steady for the day, but showed a loss of about 75c from the high point touched early this week.

Final prices made hogs 15@50c higher than a week ago, with lightweight animals showing the big end of the advance. The average price this week was placed at $17.45, against $16.80 last week. Pigs were 60@75c higher than a week ago, having been greatly benefited by an increased demand for lightweight stock to be taken out for further feeding.

Hog purchases for the day: Armour & Co., 6,300; Anglo-American, 500; Swift & Co., 2,600; Hammond, 2,000; Morris & Co., 1,200; Wilson & Co., 1,600; Boyd-Lunham, 300; Western Packing company, 900; Roberts & Oake, 500; Miller & Hart, 500; Independent, 900; Brennan, 800; Agar, 800; butchers, 400; shippers, 2,000; total, 21,300; left over, 3,000.

CATTLE.

Further contraction of the price range covering beef steers was made this week and final prices were unchanged for low priced animals, while showing a loss of 25@50c for the more expensive grades. Cows and heifers were 25@40c higher than a week ago, and calves showed a gain of 25c. Receipts for the week showed a fair decrease, but the demand was narrow, especially for high priced cattle, demand for which was affected by restrictions on the consumptive demand. Thin cattle were bought by packers and by country feeders.

Cattle at seven western markets for the week, 327,000, against 335,000 the preceding week, 309,000 a year ago, and 213,000 two years ago. Total for 1917 to date, 9,721,000, against 8,195,000 the same period in 1916.

SHEEP.

Sheep and yearlings made a gain of 25c this week, while lambs advanced 50@60c. Receipts for the week showed a fair increase, but demand was more active, and the market closed strong at the improved prices. Lambs topped at $17.25, reaching that price for the first time in many weeks. Sheep were in only limited supply. They reached $11.50 for prime ewes and sold down from $12.50 for wethers. Yearlings sold up to $13.50.

Cost Eats Bulk of Profit in Army and Navy Bazaar

New York, Nov. 17.—Big expenses cut so deeply into the receipts of the Army and Navy bazaar here Oct. 27 that out of a gross income of $71,475 there was left only $754.96 net profit to be applied to comfort kits for soldiers and sailors, according to preliminary figures submitted to the management by the federal accounting corporation which audited the accounts.

KELLEY'S CLERK NAMES PETERS IN TESTIMONY

"He'll Have to Take His Medicine, Too," She Quotes.

"Kelley told me twenty years ago that if anything ever went wrong with the People's Building and Loan association 'Peters would have to take his medicine, too.'"

This was a statement made yesterday by Carrie V. Burgoyne, for twenty-two years a clerk in the office of Harrison Kelley, secretary, who killed himself when he feared the $217,000 embezzlement of the association's funds would be discovered. She referred to Joseph G. Peters, president of the association.

Miss Burgoyne underwent the most exhaustive examination yet given any person connected with the insolvent association. For four hours she calmly answered a steady stream of questions put to her by Attorney Willard M. McEwen, chairman of a committee of stockholders investigating the wrecking of the organization. She seemed to have satisfied the committee she is innocent of any criminal act or knowledge.

Kelley's System Complicated.

The woman employé told how she started to work for Kelley in 1895 at $8 a week and how she rose to $10 and finally to $12 a week. She told how the business of the office was conducted, how Kelley confounded her with his complicated methods, how she brought the crooked "K" ledger and the check books in which were stubs that would have told the story of Kelley's speculations out of the vault every day, leaving them open for inspection in the outer office.

Her testimony was damaging to the state auditor. Asked whether the "K" ledger lay on the desk when the state auditor "came to examine the books," she answered:

"Yes, it was there on the desk with the other ledgers. There was no secret about it. Mr. Kelley generally waited on the state auditor, though. 'Carrie, you watch the cashier's window and I'll take care of the auditor,' he would say."

Didn't Fancy Peters.

"What was Kelley's attitude toward Mr. Peters?" asked Attorney McEwen.

"Outwardly they seemed friendly. But Mr. Kelley didn't seem to care for Peters as a man. He told me twenty years ago if anything ever happened 'Peters would have to take his medicine, too.'

"Mr. Kelley used to send me to John H. Wrenn & Co. with checks. At that time Mr. Peters asked me if Kelley was speculating. I told Mr. Kelley I had been asked about it, and he promised me he would never do it again. I told him if he did and I was asked again I would have to tell. I thought after that he had stopped it.

"I asked Mr. Kelley about some of the accounts in the ledgers. They had worried me. He assured me they were all right, and when I questioned further he would become impatient and intimate it was none of my business."

Miss Burgoyne said Kelley lived "penuriously." She also said Kelley was a devout church member and often upbraided her for not attending church on Sunday.

She was asked her judgment of signatures on stock signed by Peters, and declared she thought the signatures of Peters genuine. Peters when he examined them said many of them looked forged to him.

BAR CHILDREN FROM DRIVING AUTOS IN SUBURB

No one less than 16 years old may drive an automobile in Oak Park. No one under 18 may drive an automobile unless accompanied by an adult, and no automobiles may be parked within a block of the high school. The police will arrest all speeders.

These were the orders issued by the Oak Park village board Friday night, following the accident Tuesday in which six Oak Park high school students were seriously injured when automobiles driven by Miss Eleanor Atwood and Miss Elizabeth Duffield crashed on a corner near the high school.

Miss Helen Pennell of 84 North Marion street is still in a serious condition. Vlademar Larson of 844 South Scoville avenue and Miss Florence Rogovski of 224 North Kenilworth avenue are still in the hospital waiting for broken limbs to mend.

Mrs. Warren Fined $8,000 for Evasion of Customs

New York, Nov. 17.—Fines aggregating $8,000 were imposed in the federal court here today on Mrs. Whitney Warren, wife of a wealthy New York architect and treasurer of the Secours National Fund for the Relief of French Women and Children, who pleaded guilty of undervaluing expensive gowns she brought into this country from Paris.

COTTON.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—COTTON—The cotton market recovered a good part of yesterday's losses during today's trading. The rumors that had been circulating on the sharp break of late yesterday, proved to have been unfounded, and there was active covering on today's advance, which carried January contracts up to 27.50c, or more than $2.00 per bale above last night's prices. The close was a few points off from the best under realizing, but the tone was firm at a net gain of 25@41 points. The market opened firm at an advance of 21@34 points. There was more or less nervousness, however, and early fluctuations were irregular, with the market sagging off several points right after the opening. The market firmed up again during the middle of the morning and reached the highest levels in the late trading, with the general list showing net advances of 29@48 points. Futures:

Stockholders Should Be on Guard.

The shareholders of a corporation evidently cannot concern themselves with the details of its business as can the investors in a small building and loan association; but the more attention they give, the better for them. The ethics of corporate management has improved greatly in the last few decades, but there is still room for vast betterment, as illustrated in the affairs of the Carbon Steel company.

At the annual election of that corporation a few days ago the old management was ousted, and now a court is taking testimony on charges that officers of the company had voted themselves large bonuses in addition to their salaries.

It has been admitted that the directors voted a bonus of $500,000 to the president of the company, to be distributed by that official as he saw fit, and that the president awarded something over $38,000 each to three other directors and officers and kept the rest himself. The bonus equaled 16 2-3 per cent on the $3,000,000 of common stock. If this is all the directors took they divided fifty-fifty with the stockholders, to whom quarterly dividends of 4 per cent each had been paid recently. Indications are that they took more. They probably would have been undisturbed had they been less greedy, but the discrepancy was too large, a minority stockholder's suspicions were aroused, and investigation followed.

The moral of this affair is that stockholders should insist on having complete and detailed reports, and should study them carefully. The directors and officers of a corporation should, and usually do, serve faithfully the interests of the stockholders, but there are exceptions, and attention on the part of stockholders is needed to put an end to all improper practices.

St. Louis and San Francisco Bonds.

H. M., Lead, S. D.—The St. Louis and San Francisco adjustment 6s, outstanding to the amount of $35,192,000, are entitled to 6 per cent interest, if earned. Any past due interest must be paid at or before maturity of the bonds, in 1955, but no interest will be paid on deferred interest. These bonds are junior to a little more than $188,000,000 of obligations, the annual interest charge on which, plus rents and sinking fund, is about $9,500,000. Interest on the adjustment bonds added to the other charges makes a total of about $11,611,500. In the year ended June 30 last net income was $16,202,114. In July and August earnings showed an increase, so that for the present interest on the adjustments appear safe. However, they are not seasoned and must be considered speculative for the present.

Public Service of Northern Illinois.

E. M. L.—Gross earnings of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois have shown a steady and rapid increase for years. In the last year increased operating costs have reduced the net earnings of many of the strongest utility companies, but Public Service still shows an increase. Net in the year ended Sept. 30 last was $3,304,200, an increase of 1 per cent as compared with the calendar year 1916. The company recently issued $1,500,000 of 6 per cent notes, secured by deposit of $2,000,000 of refunding bonds. Total interest on funded debt, including these notes, is $1,709,650, which is a little more than half the sum applicable to paying it. The new notes, being on the same basis as the refunding bonds, are well secured.

General Baking Company.

L. B. M., Murphysboro, Ill.—The General Baking company owns plants in twenty cities, which are given a value of $4,690,576 in the balance sheet. Good will is carried at $7,010,868. There is $3,400,000 of common stock outstanding, $5,925,000 preferred, and $2,900,000 of first mortgage bonds. The company also has guaranteed the $1,800,000 bonded debt of the Kolb Baking company of Philadelphia. It had a floating debt on Dec. 31 last of $575,000. Net earnings in 1916 were $919,053, covering interest nearly four times. Full dividends have not been paid on preferred stock for some years, and there is about 18 per cent accrued. On this showing the bonds are entitled to only a moderate rating.

Brief Answers.

H. T. N., Seattle, Wash.—The Wabash railway is earning about 1½ per cent on its common stock after allowing for preferred dividends. Gross earnings are showing an increase of about 8 per cent over last year and net a very small decrease. Evidently the common stock is almost purely speculative at present.

J. A. M., Dubuque, Ia.—Chicago Great Western is now earning about 2 per cent a year on its $45,210,513 of preferred stock. That stock is entitled to 4 per cent a year cumulative. Thus far a total of 4 per cent has been paid on it, leaving 9 per cent unpaid.

OIL LEASES FOR SALE

Oklahoma, Kansas and Wyoming Properties

Big Chicago financial interests asked me to find three exceptional oil properties for development. In three months in Oklahoma, Kansas and Wyoming fields I found fifteen for them to select from. The remaining twelve are for immediate sale.

Most of these properties are now producing, others are offsets adjoining production, and the remainder large acreage with fine speculative possibilities.

Some of the producing properties are in shallow fields (600 to 800 feet) with heavy flush and settled production. A number of them include proven locations for new wells.

All producing properties are fully equipped with power plants, pipe line connections and storage tanks, casing, etc., and are now operating.

For a quick turnover I will deliver these leases, either in part or as a whole, at a bargain.

LOAN PAYMENTS REFLECTED IN N. Y. STATEMENT

Deposits Decrease Over $136,000,000, with Surplus Smaller.

The New York bank statement showed some large changes due to payments on the Liberty loan. Loans increased $222,951,000, while deposits decreased over $136,000,000. The shrinkage in deposits save the excess reserve, for in the aggregate reserve there was a decrease of nearly $22,000,000 cash. The reduction in reserve requirements, however, left the surplus at $109,260,310, being a decrease of but $370,130. The figures follow:

The local federal reserve bank statement reflected Liberty loan payments in that bills discounted for members increased nearly $13,000,000. It is probable that next week's figures will make an entirely different showing. The statement of the federal reserve bank of Chicago for the week ended Nov. 16, with comparisons, follows:

Brokers to Act.

A movement is under way among utilities brokers in New York to enforce the same rules of delivery on stocks sold between offices, whereby deliveries must be made on the day following sales, at 2:15 p. m. Brokers who have actively entered into this arrangement are mainly specialists in Cities Service stocks, and who have been aware of the large short selling transactions among houses in which deliveries were made at any time that suited the seller, the result being that some operators were able to wring large profits out of the market on practically no capital.

The new arrangements are aimed directly at promiscuous short selling. It is stated by various brokers that this ruling will be extended to other stocks than Cities Service. It will not affect regular transactions between brokers and customers where sufficient margin is made for proper sales and regularity in deliveries is assured.

COUNTRY BANKER URGED TO HELP IN THIRD LOAN

Already consideration is being given the coming of the next Liberty loan by various organizations. It has become well fixed in the banking mind that so long as the war lasts there will be a series of Liberty loans.

The position of the country banker in connection with Liberty loans has met with a varied line of comment. The Illinois Bankers' association, through its president, Robert R. Ward, has already taken up consideration of the country banker and urges his coöperation in the following addressed "To the Country Banker," which is featured on the entire first page of the association's bulletin:

"The subscriptions to the second Liberty loan amplified the patriotism of the citizens of Illinois. Did you do your part? Do you feel the satisfaction that comes from a duty well performed? The experiences of the last month, without exception, clearly demonstrate that where the country banker has answered his country's call whole heartedly and sincerely, his community has responded generously and graciously.

"Our task is not done. We must prepare now for what is to come. It is obvious that the third Liberty loan will soon be upon us and we must be ready. Sell your bonds to your customers. Clear the channels of your bank so that you will be ready and eager to again underwrite your prescribed allotment.

"Our boys have gone to the front and are fighting for our country because they believe that a country that is good enough to live in is good enough to defend—is good enough to fight for, is good enough to die for. To you and to me is left the lighter task of paying for the work that they are doing."

NEW PAPER COMPANY INCORPORATED. The Great Eastern Paper company has been incorporated under the laws of Maine with a capital of $1,200,000. The company owns 300,000 acres of timber land in the Province of Quebec, Canada.

MARKET COMMENT

THE New York market was firm but dull and this is regarded favorably in commission houses. It should give both investors and speculators an opportunity to get back their nerve and take stock of conditions as they now exist rather than being governed by a natural but overnervous condition of mind which the recent activity in the market occasioned.

Crucible Steel will pay, it is said, about $7,000,000 a year to the government in war taxes on the present rate of earnings. Eliminating tax considerations, the company has succeeded in establishing a stable and good earning power which it is maintaining in the face of difficulties of getting raw materials. Roughly, in the next year's annual report, the government tax item will about replace back dividend payments on the preferred stock in this year's report. The amount shown for the common stock will change little from this year, when $18 a share was earned.

According to Wall street, insiders are placing a conservative valuation of $150,000,000 on the assets of the International Mercantile Marine company, including foreign and domestic holdings. This is on the basis of $100 a ton for the company's 950,000 tons of shipping.

CHICAGO CURB QUOTATIONS

TRADING in local unlisted securities has been on a limited scale, although there is a better general demand at the present level of values than has been in evidence for some time. Avery preferred was wanted at 95, with offerings at 96. The common remained steady at 89 to 91. J. I. Case preferred was wanted at 80. Emerson Brantingham preferred was quiet at 39½ to 41.

Great Lakes Dredge and Dock was in demand at 50, with stock offered at 55. Kellogg Switchboard and Supply company was wanted at 200, with offerings at 210. Butler Brothers changed hands at prices ranging between 180 and 183.

Sugar stocks were quiet. Michigan Sugar was traded in at 79¼. Columbia Sugar was firm between 11½ and 12. Holland-St. Louis advanced to 10¼ bid, with offerings at 11. Minnesota Sugar common was offered at 20, with very little interest on the buying side. Utah Idaho was unchanged at 9 to 9½.

Inland Steel changed hands at 150. U. S. Gypsum preferred sold at 88.

Public Utilities showed a little improvement in prices. Reported sales were as follows: Cities Service common, 190; preferred, 73. Northern States Power common, 55; preferred, 89. Standard Gas and Electric common, 5; preferred, 23; United Light and Railways common, 26; preferred, 59. American Light and Traction common, 180. American Public Utilities common, 25; preferred, 58; Pacific Gas and Electric common, 35. Middle West Utilities preferred, 58.

CHICAGO STOCK TRANSACTIONS

UNION CARBIDDE-CARBON had another day of steadiness in the local market. The shares were moderately active and also firm, closing 1¼ points above the previous day. It begins to appear that the bulk of the liquidation is over.

Swift & Co. shares have not as yet shown much recuperative power. A great deal of the stock appears to have been in the hands of small investors and when the avalanche of selling all stocks was on, Swift & Co. fell with the rest and in doing so jarred the confidence of holders not able to carry their speculative commitments.

Peoples Gas does not act well and sold at 38, a decline of 1½ points. Sears-Roebuck common was steady to firm and shows an advance of ¼. Commonwealth Edison was fractionally lower at 101¼. Pneumatic Tool was up 3½ points at 46.

In the bond department City Railway 5s were quoted at 89, ¼ below the previous day. Commonwealth Edison 5s were steady at 92.

UNSETTLED TONE IN CORN MARKET; OATS ARE LOWER

May Corn Is Firmer than Other Months; Cold Weather Wanted.

Market for corn futures was unsettled yesterday with volume of trade light. December corn closed ½c lower, January was fractionally lower, while May was ⅛@¼c higher. Prices ranged higher during much of the session under scattered buying and lack of selling pressure. The weaker tone in oats and talk of large receipts here next week were the chief bearish influences, but there was little disposition to trade with market and political conditions so unsettled. Cold and dry weather is wanted over the belt to condition the vast quantity of soft corn, farmers in some localities reporting that they have been unable to crib their corn under existing conditions. Unsettled weather is promised for parts of the belt.

Cash corn ruled steady for good grades and 5@15c lower for poor stuff. Local shipping sales were 10,000 bu. Receipts here were 68 cars, all new. Primary markets had 589,000 bu corn, against 854,000 bu a year ago. Local receipts this week were 1,120,000 bu and shipments 153,000 bu.

Oats Under Pressure.

Oats started out firm but soon weakened and at the finish were ⅝@¾c under previous resting spots. December was relatively the weakest and again dropped to a discount under the May. Cash houses were liberal sellers of December oats, some of them buying May in exchange. Offerings of the latter came largely from local longs, with a little short pressure also noted. A late feature was the selling of considerable May oats by Tietgens, commission houses taking the offerings. Demand for cash oats was less active, with the big elevator concerns practically out of the market. No. 3 white sold mainly at 2c over December price, with some houses trying to buy at 1¾c over, although willing to pay 2¼c over for Standards.

Prices in the sample market were steady to 1c lower, with local shipping sales 30,000 bu. Receipts here were 193 cars. Primary markets had a total of 1,249,000 bu oats, against 802,000 bu a year ago. Local receipts for the week were 3,082,000 bu and shipments 2,003,000 bu.

Provision Market Weakens.

The provision market was lower, due largely to selling by prominent local traders. This selling was not heavy, but there was not much buying power in the market and prices easily gave way under the pressure. Local shorts were chief buyers. Hog prices at the yards were firm. Western markets received 600,800 hogs for the week, against 428,150 last week and 849,850 a year ago. Cash trade reported as good. Local meat shipments this week totaled 17,129,000 lbs, compared with 18,364,000 lbs a year ago, while lard shipments were 2,285,000 lbs, against 5,342,000 lbs last year.

Rye Quiet and Steady.

Rye was unchanged. Cash No. 2 sold $1.80½ and No. 3 $1.79. Receipts were 10 cars.

Barley ruled unchanged. Malting was quoted $1.20@1.36 and sold $1.20@1.35; feed and mixing quotable $1.05@1.25, with feed men paying $1.28 for malting barley; screenings were quoted 60c@$1.02 and sold 75@94c. Receipts, 68 cars.

Timothy seed was dull. March closed $8.30 bid and $8.50 asked. Cash lots were quoted $5.50@7.50. Clover seed ruled easy. Cash quotable $20.00@26.00 and spot prime $26.60.

Flaxseed 5¾c lower. Cash was quoted $3.25¼@3.29¼.

COFFEE.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—COFFEE—There was renewed liquidation in the market for coffee futures inspired by the more optimistic view of shipping conditions and talk of an easier tone in the cost and freight market. The opening was at a decline of 6 to 8 points. The close was at the low point, showing a net loss of 16 to 18 points. Closing bids: December, 6.83c; January, 6.92c; March, 7.10c; May, 7.26c; July, 7.43c; September, 7.60c. Spot coffee was dull; Rio 7s, 7¾c; Santos 4s, 9½c. Offers of Santos 3s were reported in the cost and freight market at 9.20c London credits and there were rumors that lower bids had been accepted. The official cables reported a decline of 125 reis at Rio. Santos spots were 50 reis lower and futures 50@75 reis lower. Brazilian port receipts, 71,000 bags; Jundiahy, 47,000.

GOSSIP OF THE PIT

NOTICE was sent to members of the Board of Trade by John R. Mauff, acting president, requesting them, until further notice, not to apply for licenses from the food administration. The officials of the Board of Trade are waiting to hear from the committee at Washington and wish to ascertain definitely just what the government requires. A full report from the committee is expected early next week, and pending this report the members are requested to do nothing.

"Corn cannot be cribbed and what has been cribbed in most instances is being sorted and almost one-half is being thrown out," says a message from Mendota, Ill. "In some cases corn is so hot in the crib that a person cannot bear his hand on it two feet below the top. Corn is sprouting and some farmers report sprouts two inches long. Some of it is turning black and they are at a loss to know what to do. Early frost killed the stalk and left the corn in the milk, then weather continued wet and lack of sunshine and dry winds prevented corn from drying, and today it is in a condition which has never confronted the farmers before. Condition was better four weeks ago than today."

Crary-Johnson company's Mercer (Mo.) correspondent says: "We have a large acreage of corn throughout this territory, which is drying and curing slowly. A month will put it in better shape if weather is favorable. Small shippers are loading their ear corn without sorting and in this way buying a lot of high priced experience and trouble, as this puts shelled corn out of condition quickly."

Wheat receipts at Minneapolis and Duluth this week totaled 3,278 cars, against 5,419 a year ago. Winnipeg had 6,192 cars, against 5,040 last year. Kansas City, St. Louis, and Omaha received 2,516 cars, against 1,632 a year ago.

Several cars of new corn were received here yesterday from Oklahoma grading No. 1 mixed. Most of them applied on contract at price said to be $1.92. No. 1 mixed corn sold in the spot market at $2.39, being highly colored.

Receipts inspected Saturday: Wheat, 57 cars; corn, 68 cars; oats, 193 cars; rye, 10 cars; barley, 68 cars. Hogs estimated for Monday, 44,000 head, and for all next week 180,000 head.

"Farmers around here have learned that it is out of the question to crib corn until we get into steadily cold weather," read a Joliet (Ill.) message to J. E. Bennett.

It is reported that agents of the Illinois Central road downstate have been advised that empty eastern cars will be available for grain loading within a day or so.

Argentine cable to Broomhall reports further frosts in parts of that country and says crop prospects have been lowered.

Hoover Wants Hogs

Hoover states that every pound of fat is equal to a bullet and every hog is equal to a shell in winning this war, and that every pound of fat placed on a hog means a weaker streak for Germany and a stronger soldier for the U. S. A.

This company is now feeding, on materials heretofore wasted, over FIVE THOUSAND hogs — has contracts for feeding FOURTEEN THOUSAND, and hopes to be feeding FIFTY THOUSAND within the next ninety days.

The UNITED DISPOSAL & RECOVERY COMPANY should produce before July 1, 1918, over three million pounds of pork, through feeding to swine materials that would ordinarily be destroyed by incineration.

DO YOU WANT TO ASSIST IN THIS PATRIOTIC AND PROFITABLE ENTERPRISE?

The UNITED DISPOSAL & RECOVERY COMPANY believes that at the present time the established governmental policy of conservation of waste materials will be best served by the recovery of valuable by-products from materials heretofore wasted, and to that end is offering to the public for the first time this issue of preferred stock. We offer subject to prior sale:

Trading Is Dull.

New York, Nov. 17.—The week-end session of the stock market was devoid of interest, dealings dwindling to almost the smallest total of any day for more than a year.

Price movements were narrow for the most part, rails again evincing heaviness, while industrials, notably equipments, were firm to strong with shippings and motors.

Canadian Pacific made a fractional decline to the new low of 130⅛, but more than retrieved its loss. Delaware and Hudson dropped 2¼, and People's Gas was heaviest of the utilities, approximating its lowest on a decline of 2⅜ to 37⅝.

Metals and Motors Strong.

Marine preferred, Atlantic Gulf, and American International rose 1@2 points, Baldwin and American Locomotives 1½@3, and General Electric and the active motors 1@2 points.

Coppers and steels were little altered at the outset, but became firmer in the moderate outburst of activity just before the close, when shippings and specialties shaded slightly.

Demands arising from the second Liberty loan installment doubtless accounted for the more important changes in the bank statement.

Mercantile paper, 5½ per cent. Sterling, 60 day bills, 471½; commercial, 60 day bills, on banks, 471; commercial, 60 day bills, 470⅝; demand, 475¼; cables, 476 7-16. Government bonds irregular. Railroad bonds weak.

GENERAL MOTORS OUTPUT SHOWS LARGE INCREASE

During the month of October General Motors actually sold 19,169 cars, or at the rate of 230,000 yearly, as compared with the actual output of the last fiscal year, when only 185,000 cars were sold. Compared with October a year ago the gain is 6,221 cars, or 48 per cent, and the gain is 2,246 cars when compared with September.

From August to October, inclusive, the company succeeded in selling 54,432 cars, representing an actual turnover in cash of $56,850,000, bettering its 1916 first quarter by 16,548 cars, or $20,607,000. October profits of $3,325,000 are the largest for any month this year. This is at the rate of approximately $40,000,000 per year, compared with actual profits of $30,000,000 for 1916.

From Aug. 1 to Nov. 1 earnings were $9,700,000, compared with $6,695,000 to Nov. 1 and $9,136,000 to Dec. 1 a year ago. It takes $9,907,000 to pay the year's dividends on the common stock, and it can be seen that by this time the full 12 per cent has been earned. No allowanec has been made for war taxes.

Liberty Bond Movements Perplex Wall Street

New York, Nov. 17.—Liberty bonds moved in a perplexing manner on the stock exchange today, the 4s declining in the first hour to the new low record of 98.11, a depreciation of almost 2 per cent, while the 3½s advanced from yesterday's final quotations of 99 to 99.22.

The 4s continued to decline to 98.10, closing at 98.34, while the 3½s rose to 99.58, closing at that quotation.

Various reasons are given by bond dealers in explanation of this movement. The more popular theory is that the 3½s, being tax exempt, are most favored by persons of wealth, while the 4s are subject to a supertax.

It is believed also that many subscribers to the 4 per cents found themselves unable to take up their allotment by reason of existing conditions in the stock market and that these subscriptions are now being liquidated.

Federal Trade Service Issues Revenue Pamphlet

The Federal Trade Information Service of Washington, D. C., has issued a pamphlet of eighty-four pages covering the "War Revenue Law of 1917," divided into two sections, one being the exposition of the law and the second the text of the law. The exposition of the law is made by titles corresponding to the arrangement of the act, and references are made throughout to the various sections of the act. The index is arranged by titles with the various sections subsidiary for convenience of the reader. The price of the volume is 50 cents.

ON THE BROAD STREET CURB

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—[Special.]—With the restriction of buying power becoming so pronounced in all security trading markets it was natural that lower prices should be established in many of the issues traded in on the Broad street curb, but the tone of that market held fairly steady, with a rallying tendency in evidence. The number of stocks traded in was unusually large, including issues that have been neglected for a long period, an instance being Kresge Stores, which was traded from 72 to 60 with a rally to 65.

Cities Service, which sold down to 186 dividend, later rallied to 192, and Everett & Heaney was in good demand, and after dropping to 20 rallied to 20⅝. Chevrolet ranged from 65 to 54 and United Motor sold down from 16 to 14¼. Wright-Martin yielded from 7⅝ to 6¾, rallying to 7¼, and Curtiss Aeroplane sold at 27 to 26.

The oil stocks were irregular, Houston Oil being strong and advancing from 17 to 19½, while International Petroleum declined from 11⅝ to 10. Midwest Refining had the widest range, declining from 117 to 106. Merritt yielded from 25⅝ to 21½. Cosden sold at 7⅝ to 7¼.

Mining stocks were fairly active and were in good demand during the greater part of the week.

Bonds were irregular, with Russian 6½s ranging from 62 to 66½ and reacting to 63, and the 5½s advanced from 53 to 59, later reacting to 55. Canadian government 5s were firm, with sales at 94½ to 94⅞.

OIL NEWS

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—[Special.]—Declaration of an extra dividend of $24 a share by the Solar Refining company following a $6 extra dividend by Standard Oil Company of Kansas a few years ago is one of the most encouraging developments that have yet taken place from the viewpoint of investors in oil securities. These are not the only extra dividends recently declared by Standard Oil. Some of the pipe line companies have increased payments to stockholders and the Standard Oil Company of Ohio and Chesebrough Manufacturing company have maintained their usual extra dividends.

Ability of Standard Oil companies to increase their dividends at a time when other industrial companies are not making so favorable a showing is attributed mainly to the fact that Standard Oil business never got on the "war basis" of other companies in the last few years, but, on the other hand, has enjoyed a constant and healthy growth. That normal expansion has been financed by the companies themselves and they have no difficulty in building up large surpluses. Stockholders are now getting the benefit of that sort of management.

Election of Walter C. Teagle as president of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey will result, it is believed, in the more energetic development of the oil resources of Wyoming in order to supply sufficient high grade oil to meet present enormous needs.

Teagle is credited with being one of the first of the big Standard Oil men to see the possibilities of Wyoming, and he and his assistants are also credited with now controlling the Midwest Refining company. A controlling interest in the stock of this company is deposited in a voting trust, comprising Raymond E. Jones, manager in New York for the Royal Bank of Canada; Henry S. Osler of Toronto, and John Evans, president of the International Trust Company of Denver.

Before his election as president of the New Jersey company, Teagle's headquarters were in Toronto, as head of the Imperial Oil company, the Standard Oil subsidiary in the dominion.

It is considered probable that Wyoming crude oil eventually will be brought east. This would necessitate the building of a pipe line from Wyoming to a connection with some of the transcontinental lines, more likely the Prairie system. If eastern and midcontinent supplies of high grade oil become inadequate it is regarded as certain that the market for Wyoming crude will be broadened.

The oil business in 1917 has been of greater volume than ever before. This volume will be surpassed in 1918, judging from present indications. There is an active demand for every gallon of gasoline that can be manufactured, and this same condition will hold true next year from present appearances. The demand for lubricating oil and wax is far in excess of supply.

BOOSTS LINSEED OIL.

The American Linseed company has advanced its price for all grades of raw American linseed oil 2 cents. It is now quoting city brands at $1.23 a gallon and western brands at $1.22.

LOOSE-WILES NET SOARS AS PRICES ARE BOOSTED

It is understood that earnings of the Loose-Wiles Biscuit company for the nine months to Sept. 30 were at the rate of 12 per cent on the $8,000,000 common stock after deducting the three-quarters proportion of dividends on the $6,915,000 of first and second preferred stocks. The company has paid no second preferred dividends for three years and by Dec. 31, 21 per cent will have accrued on this issue. The second preferred amounts to $2,000,000, so that 21 per cent does not run into a very large amount and could easily be liquidated from the surplus profit of 1917 if such a course was deemed advisable.

It is said that the gross earnings of the company are running at the rate of better than $20,000,000, as compared with $12,000,000 four years ago. Prices were advanced in April and the improvement in net this year to the largest figures the company has ever shown is largely the outcome of this increase in price together with a record volume of sales.

It will take two or three years more to put the corporation solidly on its feet because of its not being particularly strong in working capital.

AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL.

The American International corporation has requested its stockholders to approve a plan calling for the execution of a mortgage upon the land on which the fabricating plant is to be constructed.

U. S. LAND BANKS DOUBLE FARMERS' LOANS IN MONTH

Lend $7,374,044 Out of $27,416,463 Asked in October.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 17.—[Special.]—The federal farm loan board announced today that during the month of October the twelve federal land banks paid out to farmers of the United States in 5 per cent loans under the federal farm loan system $7,374,044.

This was practically double the amount paid out during the previous month, and indicates that the process of making loans through the federal land banks is being speeded up greatly. The total amount now paid out to farmers is $21,040,138. It is fully expected that from now on more than $8,000,000 will be paid out each month.

Loans of $27,416,463 Asked.

During October the twelve federal land banks received applications for loans amounting to $27,416,463, and approved loans amounting to $20,119,240. This brings the total applications for loans in the hands of banks up to a total of $193,650,945.

This represents the applications only of organized farm loan associations, totaling approximately 3,000, one-half of which have actually been chartered and the other half of which awaits action by the federal land banks. In addition the banks estimate that there are approximately 2,000 other farm loan associations being organized in the United States which, when their applications are filed, will bring the grand total of applications to nearly double the present amount.

Loans Asked and Granted.

The following table shows the amount of loans applied for, and the amount of loans actually closed and paid out in the central western states:

States—	Total loans applied for.	Total loan closed.
Indiana	$3,128,320	$742,700
Illinois	1,371,360	143,575
North Dakota	9,155,550	938,300
Minnesota	4,778,500	694,900
Wisconsin	1,986,270	445,200
Michigan	4,443,680	647,200
Iowa	1,588,900	48,800
South Dakota	3,925,630	286,500

FINANCIAL NOTES

ALLOUEZ MINING COMPANY is likely to come close to a production of 10,000,000 pounds of copper this year provided the increased output expected for November and December materializes. The mine can be reasonably expected to continue this production for ten years to come. The rock is showing 18 pounds of copper to the ton, and, while this high yield may continue for some time, with greater depth the rock runs to a poorer grade.

Copper output of the Lake Superior mines was the largest since March and this month promises to show a further increase. Three or four of the mines again are working normal forces and others are increasing their crew regularly. By December it is expected that mines in Michigan again will be producing at the rate of 20,000,000 pounds monthly despite the loss of hundreds of miners who have gone into the service of the government.

The Norfolk and Western railway in the nine months ended Sept. 30 earned a surplus on the common stock of 11.3 per cent, compared with 13.1 per cent in the corresponding period a year ago, which also was the record year. The full twelve months ended last December yielded 17.5 per cent on the stock. For the current year earnings should run to about 15 per cent.

Net operating revenues of the sixty telephone companies in the United States for the month of June was estimated at $8,431,210, as compared with $8,016,869 for the same month of last year, according to reports filed with the interstate commerce commission and made public yesterday. For the six months ended June 30 net operating revenues amounted to $51,208,019, as compared with $47,415,000 for the same period in 1916.

AETNA PLANT REOPENS.

The plant of the Aetna Explosive company, located at Drummondville, Quebec, which has been closed for several months, is again operating.

Before purchasing oil securities it will pay you to investigate a company with an outlet for its entire production and a demand for the products of its refinery greatly exceeding the available supply.

Development

The company is shipping ore from Cohutta to the Chattanooga Coal and Iron Company. This one property has put the company on better than a 20% earning basis.

Wells have been sunk to determine a location on the manganese property at Cohutta, and it is the company's intention, in the very near future, to develop this property.

At Wildwood, Ga., development is being pushed as rapidly as possible, and the company is now shipping ore. Roadways have been built, tracks, steam shovels, and other necessary equipment have been bought and the Southern Railway is building us a siding.

The diverging diagonal lines in the Aetna Explosives chart above indicate a condition to be found in many companies whose stocks are traded in on the New York Curb—a declining trend in the price of shares in the face of steadily increasing earnings.

"Who are accumulating stocks at declining prices?" is one of the biggest questions in the Street. If you are a student of investment conditions, send for these charts.
